THE author began this work ten years ago, principally for his own edification ; but, as he proceeded in his labors, his manuscript was sought after by many persons, who persuaded him to prepare it for the press. There are, doubtless, some mistakes in the work ; as it is impossible at this late day to prepare genealogical statistics with perfect accuracy. There are many omissions ; but he has done his utmost to include all by the name of Reed, with the collateral branches, so far as they could be obtained. He has written hundreds of letters of inquiry, to which he never received a response ; and many others, to which the answers were so meagre, that little information could be obtained from them. He has spent much time and money in travelling to search old records, and has done all in his power to make them as full and complete as possible. Not a few, both ladies and gentlemen, were unable to give the Christian names of grandparents, — showing the deplorable neglect of many of their forefathers in preserving records of family events; while others have provided him with much that is valuable and interesting, going back several generations. His massive accumulation of correspondence, and his copies of records, show a great variety of taste and disposition; and they are all preserved as mementoes for the perusal of coming generations.

The origin of the name, and other hypothetical remarks, at the commencement of the work, may be criticized and ridiculed by some who have never devoted much attention to the subject; but there is much more evidence to substantiate the theory of the author than a casual observer would suppose. If all the vouchers were inserted, the book would necessarily be too large. It is much easier for people to find fault with the work of others than to do it well themselves.

The body of the work is mostly taken from state, county, town, parish, church, and family records; but in some cases it consists merely of the oral statements of members of those particular families to which they have reference; while in most cases, where there were no records, different members of the same branch would differ in many points of their statements, and thus make it necessary to search for other proof to establish the facts.

If the subject had been postponed twenty years longer, much that is contained in this volume could not have been obtained; for many who, ten years ago, stood as landmarks between the living and the dead, have gone to their rest.

The engravings have been procured at great expense, and are generally pronounced complete likenesses of those whom they are designed to represent.

The errors, so far as discovered by the author, are noticed at the end of the book. Those who find their individual record incomplete should turn to the Appendix, as all information obtained after printing the body of the work had to be thus inserted. The records here comprised are substantially all that can be obtained on the subject; and the blank leaves are inserted to enable each family to carry out their record in the book for generations to come.

THE pedigree of different families has been kept up to some extent by almost all nations, so that every man could be called by the peculiar name and relation of his family. So strong was this habit in ancient times, that a man without a pedigree was considered equivalent to being without a parent ; as was Melchisedek, King of Salem. As far as my observation extends, the practice of retaining a pedigree first fell into disuse among the Americans soon after the country began to be settled by European emigrants, who came here during the seventeenth century ; and for the following reasons : First, the most of those who came here were in better circumstances at home than they were after their arrival here ; but, having spent all their means in emigration, they were obliged to remain. Having been misled by designing and interested men to believe that America was a land which possessed every thing desirable, a large proportion of the emigrants were sanguine in the expectation of bettering their temporal condition by emigration ; very much as people were misled by exaggerated statements in reference to California, and as they have always been misled by representations in reference to the West. But in former days it cost a fortune to come from Europe to America ; and those who embarked in such an enterprise generally had to give up all they possessed, or a great proportion of it, to get here. Many of them who had the means returned to England ; but those who had not were obliged to make the best of a bad bargain. They had abandoned all hope or expectation of any remittances from Europe. Many had been outlawed, and dared not go back. They had turned their backs on all beyond sea ; and, under such circumstances, it was most congenial to their feelings to bury the whole subject in oblivion. It was accordingly annoying to them to converse on the subject ; and, to a great extent, they refrained from conversation in reference to these matters in the presence of their children. Their location and pecuniary circumstances also combined to cause the interest in genealogy to abate, as they were scattered over a large extent of country. And what attention and strength was not exercised in defending themselves, their wives and children, from the tomahawk, was required to clear the land, to build the cottages and barns, to dig stumps and stones, to build bridges, and erect meeting-houses and schoolhouses ; and the taste for all kinds of knowledge, not called into immediate use to accomplish these and kindred objects, necessarily ceased.

When these difficulties ceased in some measure to be objects of solicitude, and they had greatly overcome these almost overwhelming difficulties ; when the howl of the wild beast and Indian had become in some degree silenced, and, in their stead, had been reared in every town the parish-church, with its spire pointing towards heaven ; when their children began to move to the sound of the church-going bell, and peace and comfort seemed to dawn upon them, — then the French War broke out, with all the terrors of the French and Indians combined : and, as soon as they had overcome the innumerable evils of this war, that of the Revolution commenced, which called into service all the men that could be spared from the plough; and much of the labor of the husbandman had to be done by females.

The next generation was agitated by another war with the mother-country; so that, till recently, the people had no time to spare to study the virtues, the achievements, the mental qualities, the political condition, or physical constitution, of their ancestors. The first white inhabitants of this country were better educated than their children. They were brought up in Europe; and a large proportion of them, being younger sons of the landed gentry and of wealthy tradesmen, had all the care bestowed upon them necessary in those days to fit them for the various civil and military stations of life, which were at that time filled generally by that class, as was the case with the ecclesiastical. In short, the various responsible offices and duties of life were at that time filled by the younger sons; and even tradesmen and mechanics were of that class, as none could be put to trades without paying a considerable sum of money in addition to their personal service; which made mechanical pursuits beyond the reach of the poor.

It was likewise a time of the greatest religious controversy ever known in Europe; and these people had been proscribed on account of their theological opinions. This controversy was carried on not only in public places, but even in private life, and intruded itself on the sacredness of the family circle; so that, in many cases, a man's foes were emphatically those of his own household. The father would generally be more conservative than his children; and the elder son, aware of his rights by seniority, would naturally take the course most likely to be in keeping with government and the laws: while the younger sons, with less of the world to control their course, were not so politic, but more sincere and enthusiastic.

From these and kindred circumstances, the controversy was warmest, and the bickerings most severe, in the domestic circle. On this account, many left wealthy parents and responsible stations, and sought an asylum in the wilds of America; and, when they departed from Catholic Europe, they turned their backs on their Catholic friends whom they had left behind.

It was impossible for such people, unaccustomed to hardship, and surrounded by wild beasts and savage Indians, to educate their children. Consequently, the first generations of those born in this country could not so well preserve written details,—a fact which appears by the church and town records. Even up to the period of the Revolution, education was in so low a state, that many distinguished officers and statesmen were unable to write a legible hand, and others were unskilled in orthography. But, since some attention has been paid to genealogical research, it is found that these persons were descended from illustrious families in Europe.

Since the people of this country have overcome the effects of the various wars in which they have been engaged, more attention has been paid to education; and, of late, genealogy has brought many curious and interesting reminiscences to light, and, as the community wakes up to the subject, will probably bring to light many more. Some, who scarcely knew any of their ancestors farther back than grandfather, can now trace their genealogy to the Norman Conquest, and the blood in their veins to noblemen and kings.

There is still in the minds of many a prejudice against paying any attention to the history of their ancestors: but the feeling is fast wearing away; and the people are now gratified in receiving information on the subject, though few are willing to devote to it that time and expense which its importance demands.

The question has been often asked me, and doubtless has been put to others, What do you expect to gain by it? By some I have been asked, if I was induced to devote so much of my time and money to the subject, from the expectation of being able to distribute an English fortune among the Reeds of this country. In answer to all such inquiries, I can say, that though there are large estates in England, which, if they could prove heirship, would go to the Reeds of America, yet, for the want of such proof, none of it will ever be obtained. But I feel compensated, from day to day, by the information which I obtain, and by the satisfaction which it affords me. Though laughed at, and called a monomaniac on the subject, I have received a constant remuneration in the new discoveries which I have made.

It is the sincere desire of the author, that those of his name and blood may experience as much satisfaction in the perusal of the work as he has had in preparing it; and that they will regard it, on his part, as a labor of love. He is confident that all who have the blood of the Reeds flowing in their veins will feel interested in perusing these pages.

He congratulates his friends that he has been able to demonstrate that the Reeds are of no mean origin; that, though their connection with thrones and empires has long since ceased to exist, they have been, and are at the present day, a powerful race, and, as a body, have acted well their part on the stage on which they have been placed.

I have learned, by the investigations I have made, the peculiar mould and cast of mind which has shown itself in my ancestors, in different ages and under different circumstances, for several hundred years; also their physical strength and developments, the adaptedness of my race to certain occupations, and their average length of life. I can say from observation, that, unless through gross carelessness, but few of them die of pulmonary complaints. They generally live to old age; eighty-five or ninety, or even a hundred years, being nothing unusual. They are capable of great endurance, especially under opposition; and possess a determined will and perseverance, which generally carry them through whatever they mean to accomplish. I have seen much in them that is praiseworthy, — much worth imitation, and less to be condemned.

The race of Reeds was originally of large and almost gigantic size and strength. This is supported by the accounts we have of them when they fought the Caledonians and Romans. Their fiery and poisonous darts struck terror into the hearts of the Roman soldiers, and put them to flight. Ancient statues also represent them to be of an uncommon size; and, at the present day, they are generally taller than the average of men.

They are to be found in all parts of the civilized world, especially in England, Scotland, Ireland, Wales, and the adjacent islands, as well as in Germany and America. They are mixed with all classes of society, and pursue all branches of business. In intellect they are above mediocrity. Some are in possession of great wealth, and only a few of them are really what is called poor. They have generally been found ready, in times of emergency, to place themselves in the front rank of danger, in order to defend their country and its laws; and have been always willing to encounter difficulty and hardship for the community, being strangers to fear, and exhibiting their true character best when opposed or persecuted. An instance of this force of will is exhibited in the conduct of Gen. Reid, of Londonderry, N.H. He had been appointed by Gov. Sullivan Commander-in-chief of the troops raised to put down Shay's Rebellion. The townsmen of Gen. Reid sympathized strongly with the Shay party, and were very indignant at Gen. Reid for accepting the appointment. On the succeeding night, when people might be supposed to be in sound sleep, he saw from his chamber-window a large number of men approaching the house, armed with all manner of offensive weapons, evidently with an intent against his person. He raised the window, and told them that the man who advanced another step would be shot. His manner and known determination of character convinced them at once that he would act as he said, and that they were fortunate in being thus timely discovered by him when they were at such a safe distance. He then took advantage of the impression he had made, to give them some wise and wholesome advice relative to their duty as citizens; and, when he had brought his harangue to a close, the parties separated,—the mob to their several homes, and he to quiet slumber. The next sabbath morning, he received an early call from the venerable pastor of the parish to suggest the propriety of his staying at home that day, on account of the fury of the populace; but his reply was, that he should be in church at the proper hour. He was accordingly there; but his determined countenance and his reputation were sufficient to keep the people under restraint, and no violence was done to him. He lived long enough to convince his townsmen of the justness of the cause he had espoused; and they loved and respected him the more for his independence of character.

But few of those bearing the name of Reed have ever been a public charge, or inmates of penitentiaries. They have been usually of a religious turn of mind, being firm supporters of the institution of the gospel; but they are fond of mirth and fun,—a propensity which seems to run through all of the name within my observation.

Having gone thus far, I hope to be indulged in noting one custom which has to some extent prevailed among the Reeds: I mean that of their marrying relatives. This practice grew out of the exclusiveness of society in Puritan times, and perhaps, in some cases, to save property in the family: but its consequences have been injurious; many of the offspring of such marriages dying in infancy, early youth, or middle age, and but few of them living to advanced years; to say nothing of cases where the effect has been still more melancholy.

HISTORY OF THE REEDS.

CHAPTER I.

ORIGIN OF THE NAME, AND HISTORY OF THE CLANS.

R EED, Read, Reid, Rede, Red, Rad, Rheade, Rheadus, Wrede, Whrede, Reda, Rada, Redha, Wada, Wrade, Raad, Ried, are all derived from the word RHEA, which had its origin in Phœnicia; having been used soon after the dispersion of the people in consequence of the confusion of language at Babylon. Rhea was a name given to the Goddess Ops, the daughter of Cœlus and Terra. She was the sister and wife of Saturn, by whom she had Vesta, Ceres, Juno, Pluto, Neptune, &c., whom her husband devoured. Her next son was Jupiter. Her residence was on Cybele, one of the mountains of Phrygia in Asia Minor. She was worshipped in that part of the world, and was a ruling deity. Her name was in some form attached to many persons and places in Phœnicia and Asia Minor, and was identified with government and rulers. The nations that were her votaries became more advanced in commerce and civilization than those around them.

Across the corner of the Mediterranean Sea stood the city of Tyre, the capital of ancient Phœnicia, as its name implies; and Ruad, or Raad, was in its neighborhood. The word Tyre probably meant the ruling city, or the city of the tyrant, or king. All governments were then despotic. "King" and "tyrant" were synonymous terms; and it only became necessary to know that a city or country had a tyrant to know that he was a king: and the fact of his being a king also gave the assurance that he was a tyrant; each of the words implying one who ruled. The word Esau seems to be the word "red," or "read," in another dialect; and the Red Sea is in some books called the Read Sea, as was also the Arabian Sea. The name Esau meant "the elder," or one having the rights of primogeniture; as Jacob meant "the younger," or one without those rights. The rights of seniority were very early established, and the elder was in all cases considered the ruler; while the Jacobins, or Jameses, or the younger, were the subjects. Esau was called the Red, being one of the greatest men of his time; his country, Edom, or Red; as the Erythræan Sea, contiguous to his dominions, was called the Read or Red Sea.

Phœnicia, Edom, and Asia Minor, were in advance of their neighbors in commerce and civilization. They so far excelled in manufactures and colors, that the rulers of other countries sought their fabrics for their kingly robes; and thus the passage of Scripture: "Who is this that cometh from Edom with dyed garments?" &c. These dyed garments were called red, having reference to Edom, or the country, with a ruler or king; as the fabrics of the present day are called damask. The word "read" and its affinities are used at the present day among many nations in that part of the world.

One of the principal cities of Persia is called by that name; and some of the rulers of India have a title which probably originated from the same source as "raja," or "rajah," for king. The word has at times been partly altered for the sake of euphony, or to suit the idiom of other dialects, and has been more or less connected with other words, making a union of both definitions: as, Ethelred, or Reed the Good; Conrad, or Reed the Powerful; Eldred, or Reed the Elder; Remus, belonging to the State; and Regina, Queen.

Among the class of words belonging to this stock, in addition to those already mentioned, are Wraid, Rade, Gerard, Gerarden, Rath, regium, reign, regent, regalia, reason, rhetoric; and also the compound of other words, as Erythræan, Tyrrhenian, Reate, Rages (now called Rei), Regia, Rhenus, Rhedarian, Rheidlingine, Reedel (or Riddle), Redesdale, Dalraid, Dalreda, and many others.

At a later period, the word became more extended in its signification, and implied counsel, advice, wisdom, &c. Still later, it meant one who could read, or the act of reading; as so few understood the art of reading, that one Bible was sufficient for a parish; and, the holy book being chained to the desk, a person would be employed to read as a clerk. This last expression gave rise to the word "clergy," or "clergyman;" meaning one who can read. The art of reading was considered so beneficial to the public, that all who understood it were entitled to the benefit of clergy; which phrase meant boring in the hand, or other corporeal punishment, for crimes committed, instead of death.

The following is the definition given by Noah Webster:—

"Sax. ræd, rad, red, speech, discourse, counsel, advice, knowledge, benefit, reason; rædan, redan, to read, to decree, to appoint, to command, to rule or govern, to conjecture, to give or take counsel; arædan, to read, to tell, to narrate; gerædan, to read, to consult; gerad, mode, condition or state, reason, ratio or account, knowledge, instruction or learning, and, as an adjective or participle, knowing, instructed, ready, suited; gerad beon, to be ready, to accord or agree; geradod, excited, quick. These significations unite this word with ready; which see. Ger. rede, speech, talk, account; reden, to speak. Dut. rede, speech; reden, reason. Dan. rede, account and ready. Ger. bereden, to berate; rath, advice, counsel, a council or senate; rathen, to advise, to conjecture or guess, to solve a riddle. Dut. raad, counsel, advice; raaden, to counsel. Swed. rad, Dan. raad, counsel; rada, raader, to counsel, to instruct. Wel. rhait, straight, right (that is, set right), decision, verdict; rheitheg, rhetoric, from rhait. Dan. ret, law, justice, right, reason. Swed. ratt, ratta, id. Ir. radh, a saying; radham, to say, tell, relate. Wel. adrawz, to tell or rehearse. Gr.  $\rho\epsilon\omega$ , for  $\rho\epsilon\theta\omega$ , to say or tell, to flow;  $\rho\eta\tau\omega\rho$ , a speaker, à rhetorician. Goth. rodyan, to speak. The primary sense of read is, to speak, to utter; that is, to push, drive, or advance. This is also the primary sense of ready; that is, prompt, or advancing quick. The Sax. gerad, ready, accords also in elements with the Wel. rhâd, Lat. gratia; the primary sense of which is, prompt to favor, advancing towards, free. The elements of these words are the same as those of ride, and Lat. gradior, &c. The sense of reason is secondary,—that which is uttered, said, or set forth; hence counsel also. The Swed. ratta, Dan. ret, if not contracted words, are from the same root.”

The present different methods of spelling the word arise, in a great measure, from fancy; there being not less than eleven orthographical forms, in which the natural result is the same. The mode of spelling in use by our Puritan ancestors was usually Reade, but, in some cases, Reede; and one of them spelled it Rede. One who figured with Napoleon I. spelled his name Wrede. A Bavarian general, who fought against Napoleon at the head of the Bavarian troops, wrote it Reid. His biographers, however, sometimes wrote it Ried. The Irish formerly spelled it Reedha, or Redha; from which came “ready.” The Scotch method was formerly Raid. The mode of spelling the name in this country has gradually assumed one of the three following forms; namely, Read, Reed, and Reid: but it affords no clew to the history of the word, as different members of the same family use all these methods.

It was common, in the infancy of governments, for kings and princes, who had been vanquished in the more civilized countries, to steal away with their effects and retainers, to seek an asylum in the wilds of Europe, and, by superior skill, flattery, and strategem, or by marriage, to work themselves into the good graces of the barbarous tribes among whom they sought shelter: as was the case with Dido, the Carthaginian queen, who fled from her oppressive brother Pygmalion, the King of Tyre, after he had murdered her husband; or like Æneas, who, after the sacking and destruction of Troy, sought a place of settlement, and finally presented his suit to Latinus, the King of the Latins, for the hand of Lavinia, his only daughter, — by that alliance becoming successor to the throne of his father-in-law, and ancestor to the founder of the Roman Empire.

Many more instances might be named where vanquished rulers became refugees among an uncivilized and barbarous people, and worked their way into power by dint of superior skill or valor: as Cæcrops, the founder of Athens; Cadmus the Phœnician, who introduced alphabetic writing into Greece, and founded Thebes in Bœotia; Danaüs, the founder of Argos; Pelops the Phrygian, whose descendants, intermarrying with those of Tyndareus, King of Laedæmon, acquired the ascendancy in Greece.

About fourteen hundred years before the Christian era, Teucer, a native of Crete (now Candia), led, in time of famine, a company to a promontory on the shore of the Hellespont, and became the founder of the Trojans. He introduced the worship of Cybele, who, according to heathen mythology, was the mother of the gods; and gave to the mountains of Phrygia the name of Ida, from a mountain by that name in Crete; and to many other locations Cretan names, among which was Miletus, — a city so called, as tradition says, from Miletus, the son of Apollo, but probably from a city of that name in the island. The goddess was called Cybele from Mount Cybele in Phrygia, and was believed to be the common parent of all the inhabitants of the earth. She was called Rhea from her being the ruling deity, and from the benefits and patronage she distributed to all her votaries. The promontory on which Teucer landed and settled was called Rhæteum. This Cybele became the tutelary deity of that region. These emigrants were a commercial people, and were called Milesian merchants. One method used in those times to increase trade was to establish colonies in other parts of the world, and to extend traffic through them; which was done by the inhabitants of Miletus and other commercial cities.

A colony of this kind was established in Italy, the founder of which was Tyrrhenus. The city of Reate (now Rieti) was built by this colony, as were also Ravenna and Veii. The sea contiguous was called the Tyrrhenian Sea. This colony was vanquished by the Gauls about three hundred and eighty-nine years before Christ; and a portion fled to the north of Italy, where they established their new home, and called it Rhætia, which comprised what is now the Tyrol and a part of Bavaria. One portion of the Alps is, at the present time, called the Rhetian Alps. The inhabitants of ancient Rhætia were called Rhedarians,—a name which was undoubtedly derived originally from Rhea. The river Rhine has its source in ancient Retia, and was formerly called Rhenus. The government of Rhætia was made tributary to Rome, by Nero, in the year of Christ 50; and the inhabitants were overrun and partially conquered by the Alemanni, or Germans, about the commencement of the third century. Some of the remnant of the nation of Rhedarians continued to lurk about their old homes; and were finally overrun by Otho, Emperor of Germany, in the tenth century. In time, they became amalgamated with their conquerors; but some of their ancient towns and cities retained their former names, being slightly altered to suit the idiom of the languages now in use. The Alemanns were in their turn superseded in the sixth century by an association of German tribes called Bavarians. This accounts for the existence of Reads in Bavaria, and for names of places in Bavaria which retain the name in connection with some other word indicating their location or history: as Rednitz, on the borders of Regia; and Reidlinggine, meaning "the place of the Reids." It is a very common name in the German States, and is abbreviated from Rhedarium. Some of the descendants of the ancient Rhedarians may have found their way to England at the time of the Saxon invasion, and retained the name; but I think it is very clear that the Reads of England, Scotland, and Ireland, went there by a different route.

About fourteen or fifteen hundred years before the Christian era, there prevailed a general fever for Western emigration, which was resorted to by tribes, who selected some new location in order to get better feeding-places for their flocks, or for purposes of plunder. The only method then known of obtaining possession of a desired spot was by what we now term "fillibustering;" as was the case with the Cretan Teucer and his company, from whom arose the Rhedarians, Dalraids, Reedhas, or Reeds. The advent of the Israelites into the land of Canaan was in keeping with the spirit of the times. The stronger would drive out the weaker; and the vanquished were under the necessity of expelling some nation weaker than themselves, in order to gain a habitation: and thus a general commotion prevailed.

The children of Israel fixed on the land of Canaan for their portion; and the Phœnician States, comprising Tyre and Sidon, were set off to the tribe of Ashur. Though these never got possession of either, their conquests in the neighborhood, and almost certain success in every engagement, filled the minds of the Phœnicians with fear. The latter were a commercial people; their property consisting of ships and merchandise, with silver and gold, precious stones, &c.

The people generally were very ignorant of the country; and the popular opinion was that the limits of the world in this direction were what were called the Pillars of Hercules (now Gibraltar) and a mountain on the opposite side of the straits. This place was supposed to be the gates, or entrance, to the infernal regions, or dominions of Pluto; but, to the Phœnician or Milesian merchants, this belief was known to be ignorant superstition. The Tyrians had established a colony a little beyond the gates, to which they gave the name of Gades (now Cadiz), where they traded, and extended their commerce through the colonists to the natives of Spain. This place became a rendezvous for their shipping in sailing and trading along the coast; and while the other inhabitants of Asia, Europe, and Africa, knew comparatively nothing of that section, the Phœnicians and Milesians had become fully acquainted with the coast of Ireland.

About five hundred years before the Christian era, the Athenians having burned the city of Sardis, — the capital of Lydia, one of the provinces of the Persian Empire, — the Persians became enraged, and began to invade the Grecian States contiguous to them with an immense army. The city of Miletus was next in importance to that of Tyre, and was one of the twelve cities which constituted the confederacy of Ionia, — one of the Grecian States. A company of merchants from Miletus, Erythræ, and other confederate cities of Ionia, rather than suffer the evils of a Persian invasion, fled with their shipping, effects, and retainers. They visited the friendly colonies along their route, and made headquarters at Gades; and, from that place, an expedition was fitted out against Ireland, which they conquered, and divided into two kingdoms. The capital of one they called Ballyreda, which is in the county of Westmeath, and, in English, means Reedstown : the capital of the other kingdom was Regia Altera (now Limerick). These invaders were called Gadeliens by the Romans, because they came upon the Roman frontier through the gates of the infernal regions, and were believed to be the subjects of old Pluto.

The figure drawn by St. Paul, in describing the armor of God necessary to withstand the fiery darts of the wicked, may have had reference to these fillibusters, as it describes their weapons and mode of warfare. Their most ancient coat-of-arms also had upon it the poisoned or bloody dart. The Romans, also having a nation of Rhedarians on their frontier in Italy, were under the necessity of distinguishing them by different names ; and the name of Gadelian was a very proper phrase to express the character of the people referred to. The inhabitants of ancient Erin called them Dalredas, or Dalredhas. The Caledonians called them Dalraids. On account of their intruding themselves upon the ancient inhabitants, and taking possession of their estates, they were called Scuits, or “wanderers,” — a phrase which gave name to Scotland. Surnames were not in use till about the year 1170 ; but clans had appropriate names, which some retained ; and others took such names as had reference to their location, occupation, or some peculiarity or achievement.

The Dalraids crossed over from Ireland to Caledonia, and so annoyed the Caledonians and the Romans, that, in order to keep them back, the latter built the wall called Agricola's, running from the Frith of Forth to the Clyde. Prince Reda and his knights scaled the wall, and put the Romans to flight, A.D. 180. After he had got possession of that part of England and Caledonia, the Romans (A.D. 210) built the wall, running from Newcastle to Carlisle, called Adrian's.

The Dalraids kept possession of the territory between the two walls, constituting a portion of the county of Northumberland. They finally conquered Caledonia, A.D. 843; and the Britons, as a sort of reproach, afterwards called it Scuitland, or a land of interlopers, or wanderers. The predatory excursions of these people were called "raids."

The Reads, or Reeds, of England descended from the above Raids, Reeds, or Reedhas; and I am able to trace the principal families to them.

The river Tyne, in the north of England, is so called from its having tynes, or branches,—one of which is called North Tyne; another, South Tyne. A third branch, taking its rise in Carterfell, and other highlands between England and Scotland, is the river Reed. The valley through which the stream winds its way to its mouth is Redesdale, comprising a portion of Northumberland. This territory formed the principal seat of the border wars. On the banks of the river Reed was fought the bloody battle of Otterburne, or Otterbrook, at the junction of a small stream by that name with the Reed Waters, as the river is called by Sir Walter Scott. This battle is sometimes called the battle of Chey Chase; meaning a chase, or park, for deer. Upon the edge of Carterfell—a mountain between England and Scotland—is Reed's Square,—a corruption of wear, a Scotch phrase for a fort or castle,—named in honor of Sir Reginald Reed, who was distinguished in the Border wars. Following the stream down, the ruins of several Reed castles and fortifications may be seen. Some splendid castles still occupied by persons of the same name and blood are also found; among which is Chip Chase Castle, not far from the junction of the Reed with the Tyne.

It may not be inappropriate here to give some further description of the territory between the wall of Agricola and that of Adrian; it being the hive from which a large portion of the ancestors of the English and American Reeds originated. It is bounded east by the North Sea, and extends westerly to the river Tweed, on the borders of Scotland; southerly to the Cheviot Hills, Carterfell, and the disputed grounds; easterly by the river Tyne and Adrian's Wall; and forms a barony by the name of Redesdale. John Thomas Freeman Mitford — a descendant of Robert Mitford, otherwise Robert of Redesdale — is the present Baron of Redesdale; who was born Sept. 9, 1785, and succeeded to the barony on the death of his father, Jan. 16, 1830. He is a prominent member of the House of Lords.

The scenes in Scott's novels and poetical works are laid here. The territory is rich in monuments of the past, — in the relics of the superstitious ceremonies of the Druids, and in the ruins of ancient Roman roads, fortifications, and towns. The wild and unfrequented glens, desolate moors, interspersed with rich alluvial valleys, splendid towns, villages, and castles; chases, parks, and forests; with the history of momentous events, — make Redesdale a romantic and interesting spot. This is the first starting-point of the Reeds of England and Scotland. Many of the name still remain there, scattered through the towns, cities, and rural districts.

Among the relics of former days at Risingham, — the Roman name of which is Habitancum, — on the banks of the river Reed, upon an eminence covered with scattered birches and fragments of rock, there is cut in alto relievo a remarkable figure called Robin of Redesdale; which, if adapted to our language, would be Robert Reed. Tradition says he was murdered by his brother, who lived at Woodburn (otherwise Woodbrook), an adjoining parish. The figure represents a man of large size, dressed in armor, and called by the peasantry in the neighborhood "the Giant." This Robin of Redesdale (meaning the Dale of Prince Rheda) flourished in the fifteenth century, and was associated with Earl Warwick. He fought and conquered the Earl of Pembroke, in the year 1470, at Danesmore, near Edgecoat in Northamptonshire, about three miles from Banbury. His name was Robert; and he took the name of Mitford, from a fording-place near his residence, to distinguish him from another of the same name. The monument was on his own estate, and intended to perpetuate his memory for his valor and success in the Border wars.

Further up the river is the Pringle, — a small stream which empties into the Reed. Tradition says that Percival or Percy Reed, Esq., fell into the hands of a company of moss-troopers, who robbed and murdered him at Batinghope, — a place on the banks of this stream; and that his spirit haunts the Pringle.

Another legend is, that Mr. Reed, of Bowland, — a gentleman of landed property in the Vale of Gala, — was prosecuted for a very considerable sum, — the accumulated arrears of teind, or tithe, — for which he was said to be indebted to a noble family, the titulars of the tithes. Mr. Reed was strongly impressed with the belief that his father had in his lifetime, by a form of process peculiar to the law of Scotland, purchased these lands; and that the present prosecution was groundless. But after an industrious search among his papers, an investigation of public records, and a careful inquiry among all persons who had transacted law-business with his father, no evidence could be obtained to support his defence. The period had now arrived at which he considered the loss of his case as inevitable; and he had formed his determination to ride to Edinburgh the next day, and make the best bargain he could by way of compromise. He went to bed with this resolution, and with all the circumstances of the case floating in his mind, and had the following dream: His father, who had been dead many years, appeared, as he thought, to him, and asked him why he was troubled in mind. Mr. Reed thought that he informed his father of the cause of his distress; adding, that it was more distressing on account of knowing that it was not due, though he was unable to produce satisfactory evidence to the contrary. "You are right, my son," replied the paternal shade. "The papers to prove the same are in the hands of Mr. —, an attorney, who has retired from business, and resides at Ivernisk, near Edinburgh. He was a person whom I employed on that occasion for a particular reason, but who had never done any business for me at any other time. It is possible that you may find the evidence there. He may have forgotten it: but you may refresh his memory by the circumstance, that we had some difficulty in making change, as I offered him a Portuguese piece of money; and that we drank the balance at a public house." Mr. Reed awoke in the morning with the full force of the vision upon his mind, and immediately set out for Ivernisk, and found the person described in the dream to be a very old man. Upon making the inquiry, the old gentleman could not recollect the circumstance; but, on mention of the piece of money, it became fresh to his recollection, and he found the papers necessary for Mr. Reed to prove his case.

The theory of Sir Walter Scott is, that this dream was only the recapitulation in the mind of the sleeper of what he had learned from his father, while awake, many years before, but had forgotten it; there being nothing strange in people's recovering, while asleep, the thread of some idea forgotten while awake. It may be added, that this remarkable circumstance was attended with bad consequences to Mr. Reed, whose health and spirits were afterwards impaired by the continual contemplation of the matter.

Many more interesting legends, which would fill a volume, might be told of the Valley of Redesdale. Some of the present names of towns and parishes are a corruption of a former word, which was derived from Reed; as Redsford for Reedsford, Radham for Reedham, and Riddle for Redesdale.

One of the most important towns of Redesdale is Morpeth, on the Wensbach River, — a small stream emptying into the North Sea.

The Reeds are numerous, from the fact that they are descended from a clan, or nation, and not from an individual. Though they have taken their origin from Aschanaz, the great-grandson of Noah, they have had an opportunity of becoming a numerous people; and, whatever their reputation might have been when the world was in a state of barbarity, they have, since mankind emerged from darkness, filled their places well, and have been among the leading men in this country and in Europe. They have generally been of a religious cast. But few have been found among the inmates of penitentiaries or alms-houses.

As the line of England and Scotland was constantly changing according to the valor and strength of parties, the Reeds became mixed up, more or less, with both nations. And as borderers in all nations are more exposed to the deprivations of the enemy, so they have the better chance of distinguishing themselves; consequently are more likely to be promoted in civil departments. This was the case with the Reeds of the English and Scotch borders. They were connected with the royal family of England long before the days of William the Conqueror. There was Withred, King of Kent, in the seventh century; Ethelred, or Read the Good, King of England, in 866; Alfred, or Reed the Shrewd, in 871; Eldred, or Reed the Elder, in 946; Ethelred the Second, in 978; and when William the Conqueror took possession of the English throne, in 1066, the legal heir to the throne was brother-in-law to the King of Scotland. Nations have in all ages united as much by marriage as by war. The Reeds were of Celtic origin, and the most powerful noblemen were of Saxon blood. Much jealousy existed between the two races. Edward the Confessor, son of Ethelred, being aware that his lineal descendants did not possess the energy and power to hold the crown against the opposition of the Saxon nobles, made a compact with his cousin, the Duke of Normandy, by which William was to have the crown at his decease; the crown being then in the power of the king to dispose of like other property. Harold, the son of Earl Godwin, represented the Saxon stock, and was placed on the throne by that interest. It should be here understood, that, when English historians speak of the people, they mean only the nobility; as the common people then had no more voice in matters of state than the kids upon the Cheviot hills. William came over from France to carry out the provisions of the compact; and Harold, in behalf of the nobles, met him, and was slain. Thus ended the struggle which had been carried on between the two races, and which had been the means of inviting the Danes, at several different times, to land upon the English shores, being encouraged by existing jealousies between the races. There appears to have been no difficulty between William and the descendants of Ethelred; the legal heir waiving his claim, and the son of William marrying the heiress: and both houses merged into one in the children of Henry; he being descended from Alfred, by both father and mother.

The Reeds were among the reigning princes of Northumberland, Kent, Wessex, and Mercia, and seem to have been of the same blood; and political alliances existed between them.

Before proceeding any further, it will be proper to give the definition of some ancient English and Scottish words which are in some way connected with this subject: viz., a "town" is a settlement containing sufficient inhabitants to be entitled to a market; a "village" is a settlement of somewhat less inhabitants than a town; a "hamlet" is less than a village; and a "court" is the manor of a nobleman or gentleman, containing the mansion and dwellings of less magnitude for the residence of his retainers and peasants. Towns or villages in England, ending with "ham," were once hamlets; and the first part of the word, in most cases, though not always, was the name of the principal owner. In the course of time, the last syllable was dispensed with; and, in some cases, the word "hamlet" has become wholly disused. In others, the orthography is slightly altered, so that the original cannot be identified without care and attention. As for instance: the word "Renham" was, originally, "Reed's hamlet;" and, in the course of time, the last syllable and one of the "e's" were omitted, the name being pronounced Redham; and, by substituting an "n" for a "d," it became Renham. A similar fate has followed the names of many other places. Other words have been not only abbreviated, but have entirely lost their original significance. Thus Sussex was South Saxony, or the southern settlement of the Saxons in England; Essex was East Saxony, or the eastern settlement; Wessex was the western settlement; Middlesex was the middle settlement; and Norfolk was the north folks. Norwich was the northern bailiwick, or sheriffdom; Canterbury was the place of the principal castle for the kingdom of Kent, as "bury" meant castle; and Kent has been somewhat altered by substituting an e for an a. Dorchester meant the place of keeping the chest, or public depository, for the county of Dorset. The word Exeter meant, "towards the river Exe." Newcastle denoted the castle built after the erection of Adrian's Wall. In reference to the name of Reading there is some doubt; for English historians, being disposed to give a Saxon origin to every thing, suggest that ancient Reading was derived either from the river (Rhea), or from Redin, the English word for "fern," which they say grew in great abundance thereabouts. This fact would probably apply to many other places in England, if we go back to a time anterior to agriculture: but the town is called, in the Saxon annals, Reading, Redding, and Raeding; and, being in the vicinity of several of the Read establishments, it is full as reasonable to suppose that they gave the name to it. We know that many of the towns by that name in America were so called in honor of individuals by the name of Reed or Read, who were prominent in the first settlement of their respective towns; and others were named from Reading in England. Places ending with "ford" had, before the introduction of bridges, reference to a fording-place across a body of water; as Bradford, in ancient times, meant Brad's fording-place. The word "burn," annexed to many ancient towns and parishes, had reference to some brook: consequently the word Otterburn would be better understood at the present day if called Otterbrook; and the same would be true of Bannockburn, and all other places of the same termination.

Many counties and towns in the United States took their names from places in England, Scotland, or Ireland, without much reference to the original meaning; as Boston, in Massachusetts, from Boston, in the county of Lincoln, England; Plymouth, from Plymouth in England; Reading in Pennsylvania, and Reading in Massachusetts, from Reading in England. The names of persons have undergone as great a change as those of places. Thus a Welshman, having pierced the eye of an English officer, received the surname of Pierce-eye, which originated the name Percy.

The same is now Pierce, or Pearce. The name of Peabody meant "mountain-man," and had reference to the remnant of the subjects of Boadicea, an English queen, who was taken prisoner by the Romans, and the remnant of her army fled to the mountains of Wales, and were called Peabodies, or "mountain-men." Winn is said to be an abbreviation of Llewellyn, the Welsh prince who was taken and slain by Edward I.; Parker, from one who was keeper of a park; Forester, from one who was keeper of a forest, and the name became Foster.

Some surnames have a significance of their own, as being illegitimate descendants of princes and noblemen, particularly all names ending with "son," as Johnson and Peterson: the former meaning the illegitimate descendants of John; and the latter, those of Peter. The name of Perry is said to be a corruption of Ap Harry, or the son of Henry.

The first notice taken of any person by the name of Rede, in Kent, was Withred, King of Kent, in the seventh century. Their seat was at Rede, in the hundred of Merdinnie, the modern name of which is Marden. There was John, of this place, in the muster-roll of William the Conqueror, A.D. 1075; and a John of Merdinnie sold the manor of Silham in Renham, or Reedham, in the year 1280. Rede is in the north-westerly part of Kent, adjoining to Maidstone, a celebrated military station. It is within the district of the weald, and has from the earliest times been esteemed a part of the king's manor. The mansion is on the north side of the district, and has always been called Reade Court. There is likewise a Reade Court in the parish of Friendsbury, in the same county, situated on the river Medway, and adjoining to Hoo. There are likewise two other manors in Kent, which for a great length of time belonged to the Reads, — namely, East and West Eulerst, in Tunbridge Wells; but they belonged to the Reads of Marden.

The ancient seats of the Reads in Mercia were Rockingham Castle, at North Hampton; so named from Roken, a small stream and parish of the same name on the banks of Redesdale, the residence of one branch of the Reads. This castle was the residence of Robin of Riddisdale. The Reeds had also an establishment at Wrangle, near Boston; and another, at Norwich. The manor called the Bowers of Gifford, about eight miles from Billerica and thirty from London, was owned by the Reeds a hundred and thirty years, but was not one of their original seats. John died in possession of it in 1627, and had a son and heir by the name of Roger. Henry died seized of it in 1712; but the manor passed out of the family in 1747, Henry having sold it to George Montgomery, Esq. There was likewise Boreplace in the county of Kent, and Barton Court, the seat of a bloody battle between the Loyalists and the Parliamentarians. The last-named manor was defended by its owner, Robert Read, till it was burned down over his head. The Reads also had an establishment at Barrie, Brocket Hall, of Abington, and Renham, or Reedham. Chipchase Castle, near the junction of the Reed with the Tyne, is occupied by Sir Christopher Reed at the present time; as is also Prestwich Lodge in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, the owner, son of Sir Christopher, being Deputy-Lieutenant of the county. Ewellgrove, Ipsdenhouse, Ashmans, in the county of Suffolk, Woodparks in the county of Galway, Ros-senara in Kilkenny, and many other manors, are now possessed by the Reeds. It was common to have several establishments; a portion of the household residing at one, and another portion at another. Those in the remote parts of England held the old country establishment, and, at the same time, another seat at or near the metropolis. This was the case with Robbin of Riddisdale, who held his property on the banks of the Roken and also at Rockingham Castle. The family of Read, in the county of Kent, held their estates in the north of England and south of Scotland; and nearly all who lived in and about London owned estates in Northumberland or in the southern parts of Scotland. They have lost their identity with royal families; but, as will be shown hereafter, many of them are persons of influence and wealth.

In books on heraldry are laid down a great many coats of arms of the Reeds, only a few of which I shall describe in their proper place.

BRIANUS DE REDE was living in the year 1139, and was of Morpeth, on the Wensback River, in the north of England. He had three sons: 1. Robert of Rede; 2. William, who was Bishop of Chichester; and, 3. Thomas of Redydale.

Robert of Rede had a son by the same name, who was Bishop of Carlisle. He was also Bishop of Chichester, and built a fine stone piazza in the centre of the city.

William, the second son of Brianus, had a son Robert, who had a son Galfrinus. The latter had William, Thomas of Redydale, and Robert. The latter had sons Richard, Philip, and Robert who held the manor of Hallbury in the seventh year of Henry VI.

William, the son of Galfrinus, married Margaret Glanville: they had Robert, who had David, John, and William. The latter was one of the bailiffs of Norwich in 1260, and had a son John, who sold the manor of Silham in Reedham in 1280.

David had a Robert, who married Cecilia Randall, and died in 1346, leaving a son Robert, Bishop of Carlisle, Feb. 8, 1396; and the same year made Bishop of Chichester, and died in 1415. He was chosen in 1381 to provide and deliver out bows, arrows, swords, &c., to defend the city in the "Tyler and Jack Straw insurrection."

William, the son of Galfrinus, also had a son William, who was Bishop of Chichester in 1330, and died in 1385, leaving a son by the same name, who was Bishop of Chichester, Sussex County, in 1369. John, son of William and Margaret, was Rector of St. Michael's in Norwich in 1393, and died in 1395.

Thomas of Redydale, the son of Galfrinus, had a son of the same name, who was living in 1429, and had a son Thomas, who possessed an estate at Heddington, Oxon, and married Christiana, daughter of Robert James Lapole, and sister of Michael De Lapole, Lord Chancellor. This Lapole Family constituted some of the worthless favorites to whom, as historians say, the king delivered himself up. The true interpretation probably is, that the Lapole Family were not of noble birth, and were on that account obnoxious to the nobility, who contrived to make them unpopular with the common people. Sensible of the value of their services, King Richard, in order to save them, stooped in vain to such acts as were considered ignoble in a prince. They were attainted, and condemned to suffer as traitors; and, though one of Lapole's associates was hung at Tyburn, Lapole found means of escape to the Continent, and much of his effects passed into the hands of his son-in-law, instead of the public treasury. This name of De Lapole is understood to be the same as that of Pool in America; persons of this name being numerous in Weymouth, Taunton, and other places in Massachusetts.

Thomas of Redydale had also an Edmond, who was the owner of an estate at Heddington. Thomas and Christiana also had John, who was Mayor of Norwich in 1388. The latter had an Edward, who married Isiod Stanley; and they had John; Bartholomew, who was Mayor of London in 1502; Robert, who was Lord Chief-Justice of the King's Bench; and William, who was Professor of Divinity. Mayor John likewise had a son Henry, who was patron of Clothell in Berks in 1405. John, son of Edward, married Joan Ludlow, and died Nov. 11, 1502, leaving a son, Thomas of Beccles, who married Philipa Bacon, and had five sons: 1. William, his heir; 2. John of Norwich, who was warden of New College, Oxon, in 1520, and died in 1521; 3. Alvan, Abbot of Waltham in 1507; 4. Edward, Sheriff of Norfolk in 1508, and member of Parliament; 5. Thomas, who was Rector of Beccles, and died in 1543, leaving a son by the name of William, who, in 1538, married a Tooley, and died in 1545, leaving a son by the name of Thomas, also a William and six daughters. The latter William was of London, and married Anna, daughter of William Fernley of Creting, and died in 1552, leaving a son, who was Sir William of Beccles, born in 1551; and Richard, who was Commissioner of the Court of Requests. The widow of William of London, who died in 1552, married Sir Thomas Gresham. Sir William of Beccles married Gertrude Paston for his first wife, and a Goldsmith for his second wife. He died in 1599, leaving a daughter, who married Sir Michael Stanhope; a son, known as Sir Thomas, who married Mildred Cecil, daughter of the Earl of Exeter; and Francis, who married the widow of Lord Cobham, by whom he had four daughters.

Thomas, son of William and Miss Tooley, married Margaret Guints for his first wife, and, for his second, the widow of John Goldingham, Esq.; and died in 1554, leaving a son Francis, who was incumbent of Ellough; a George, who married Ann Lee; and John of Beccles and Weston, who built Weston Hall, was member of Parliament for Guilford in 1575, and married Ursula Cook. He sold the estate of Oatlands, and died in 1605, leaving a son Thomas, who married Anna, daughter of Sir F. Gandy, Judge of the Queen's Bench. They had sons Henry, and Edward, who married Elizabeth Edgar. Henry married Elizabeth, the daughter of Nicholas Garneys, Esq., of Redisham, and had a son Thomas, who married Abigail Edgar of Glenham, and died in 1714, leaving a son Edward, who left by his wife Elizabeth one daughter; Thomas, who left a son Thomas, who married Anna Farr of Northcone, who died in 1723, leaving Thomas, Esq., of Weston Hall, who married Martha, daughter of John Elmy, Esq., of Beccles, and died March 25, 1766, leaving a daughter Martha, who married a Carter; Anna, who married Col. Anderson; and a Thomas, who was born in January, 1730, and married Theopila, daughter of William Lemon, Esq., and married, for second wife, Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Wilson, Esq., of Didlington, and, for third wife, Rachel, the widow of John Donaldson, Esq.; and died Jan. 29, 1811. Children: Thomas Lemon, who married Anna Bullen, and had a daughter Louisa, and son Thomas William, who married Ann Mills, and had Robert, Charlotte, Anne, Henry, and Sarah Lemon. Thomas and Theopila also had Robert, who built Ashmans in the county of Suffolk, and married Charlotte, the daughter of William Anderson, Bart., and died Aug. 13, 1822. Sarah Lemon, daughter of Thomas and Theopila, married Rev. Samuel Lovick Cooper, November, 1787. Their children were,—Bransby Blake; Robert, born April 10, 1796, married Louisa, daughter of Benjamin Henshaw, Esq., of Moor Hall, county of Essex; Louisa Charlotte, Annie, Marianne, Sarah Bransby, Madaline Naunton Lemon. He came into possession of the estates of his maternal uncle, Aug. 13, 1822; at which time he assumed the name, and lives at Ashmans.

Edmond, the son of Thomas and Christiana, married Alice, and had by her Edmond, who was Lord of Portstal; Thomas, and John. His widow Alice was executrix of the will of William De Pulham in 1372. Thomas, the son of Thomas and Christiana, possessed great estates in Wrangle, Boston, Burgh or Bury, Winthrop, Bennington, Leake, and Linston.

Edmond, the son of Edmond, had a son William; also Robert and John: the latter was a merchant, of great wealth, in Boston. He lived at Wrangle in 1460. There continued to be a John in this branch of the family till 1626. The last one was knighted in 1609, made Sheriff of Lincoln in 1610, and died in 1626, aged sixty-five years. Charles Crafts Read, who moved away from Wrangle, and in 1676 lived in Bardwell, was probably a son of the last-named John. There is a record of the death of Charles Crafts in 1662; which makes it probable there were a father and son by that name. The latter married Mary, the daughter of Thomas Henet; and she inherited the manor and royalties of Pishobury. The Reads, in 1675, had disappeared from Wrangle, partly by emigration to America; and the remainder had taken up their residence on their other estates. Francis, the son of Thomas and Bridget, left there in 1674. The Crafts of Bardwell, the Gerards of Suffolk, the Greshams of Norfolk, and the Eltons of Finsbury in Lincolnshire, were relatives of the Reads of Boston and Wrangle. Edmond, the son of Thomas and Philipa, married Isiod Stanley; and they had a son Peter, who was knighted by Charles V. at the siege of Barbary. He gave his houses in St. Giles to pay for ringing the great bell at four in the morning and at eight in the evening. There is a picture of him in the council-chamber, with a hawk on his fist, and the arms of Rede, with an account of the donation for ringing the bell, and of a large charity to be distributed to the poor of the city. He married Annie, daughter of Sir Thomas Bleugrehasset, Knt. She was the widow of George, Duke of Brampton. He died in 1568, leaving a son Giles. His wife died April 15, 1577. The records abound with the charities and bequests of Sir Peter Rede; and his name is spelled Rede, Read, Redde. His father's name was spelled Rede and Reed. This family dwelt in the black flint house opposite to the north side of the churchyard in Norwich, in which many of their arms remain. There was also a Peter Rede in Boston, in 1332, who probably belonged to this family; but I find no account of his pedigree. Thomas, the son of Edmond and Alice, had a son William, who inherited great estates from his father. He married Alice for his first wife, Margaret for his second, and Anna, the daughter of William Fernley, Esq., of West Creeting in the county of Suffolk, for his third wife. He provided obits to be observed annually for himself and his three wives at the Feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross. He died in 1453. His widow married Sir Thomas Gresham, a wealthy London merchant, who died in 1579, having made over a large portion of his estate in fee-simple to his wife. After her death, which took place in 1596, that portion passed to her son William Reade, who was born in 1538, and was afterwards known as Sir William of Rockingham Castle in the county of Northampton, one of the ancient seats of the Read Family. He had a son Thomas, who died without male issue; a daughter Anne, who married Sir Michael Stanhope; Jane, who married Lord Fitzwater, and afterwards Sir William Wetherpole; Elizabeth, who married Lord Berkley; and Bridget, who married George, Earl of Desmond. Sir William died in 1621; and his widow married Sir Edward Spencer, of the Sunderland Family, who held the Burelston Estate many years in the right of his wife; he having willed it to her, with remainder over to his three grand-daughters, the children of his son Thomas. Rockingham Castle is now a ruin.

Robert, the son of Edmond, married Christiana Lapole, a descendant of Robert James Lapole. She lived at Wrangle after the death of her husband.

Robert, the son of Edward, was executor of the will of Henry VII. He was Justice of the Common Pleas, and afterwards Chief-Justice of the King's Bench, in the reign of Henry VIII. Lord Chief-Justice Robert Read married Margaret Alphew of Chidingstone, and, when young, lived at Morpeth, Blackfriars, in the north of England, the neighborhood of large paternal estates of the family; but, in 1530, he and his wife were members of the Corpus Christi Guild at Boston in the county of Lincoln, — an institution under the old English laws, by which the community was divided into tens, hundreds, and thousands. The members of ten were responsible for the conduct of each member of his ten. The tens originated the present institution of towns, — a word which is derived from ten; as also the thousands originated that of counties. The hundreds were a class, or division, which has never been adopted in this country. The children of Lord Robert and Margaret were, — John, who was Mayor of Norwich; Bridget, who married Francis Willoughby, afterwards Lord Chief-Justice Willoughby; and three other daughters. He inherited the two manors of East and West Euerst; and he had estates in Chidingstone, Morpeth, Boston, Norwich, and other places. The estates of East and West Euerst passed to Lady Willoughby in the division of Lord Robert's estate. His son John was Mayor of Norwich, and was also Sheriff of Norwich in 1568. Bloomfield's History says, "In 1572, on the 14th of June, about nine o'clock in the forenoon, a good and godly and virtuous brother of this house (viz., John Rede, alderman), a big man, and hot with travel, after reverence to Mr. Mayor and other brethren, and in his place taken in the council-chamber, being troubled with a rheum that fell from his head, as it is supposed, did cough three times, wherewith he was stopped, and his wind failed, and so, in a sudden, seized down, and never spake any word; and so there presently departed this transitory life unto a more joyful place of rest."

Richard, the Commissioner of Requests, had a son by the same name, who studied music twenty-two years, and was admitted Bachelor of Music. He composed church-services and other matters for instruments, which are scattered in several books.

Giles, the son of Sir Peter and Annie, married Catherine Greville, the daughter of Earl Brooke.

Thomas Read, Esq., of Barton Court in the county of Berks, was living in 1575. He married Ann, the daughter of Thomas Hoo, Esq., of the Hoo, in the county of Hertford; and they had Thomas of Barton, who married Mary Stonehouse, of Little Peckham in the county of Kent, and Radley. He was Clerk of the Green Cloth. They had a son of the same name, who was knighted, and married Mary, the daughter of Sir John Brocket, of Brocket Hall in Hertfordshire. Their children were Thomas, John, and James, who were all baroneted. They also had two daughters. Thomas, son of Sir Thomas and Mary, married Mary, the daughter of Thomas Cornwall, Lord of Strophshire. Their children were Compton, Edward, and three sons whose names are not given, but probably Thomas, William, and John, who came to America. Compton, the son of Sir Thomas and Mary, married Mary, the daughter of Gilbert Cornwall of Berford. They had one child, named Edward, who succeeded his father to Shipton House in Oxford, and Barton in Berkshire, and was made baronet, in 1660, by Charles II. He married Elizabeth, the daughter of Francis Hardy, Esq., of Adston in Northampton. Their children were, — Thomas, who succeeded his father; and George, who became member of Parliament for Tukesbury in the county of Gloucester, and was a brigadier-general. Thomas, the son of Edward and Elizabeth, married Jane Dutton. They had a son named John, who succeeded his father to his estate and titles.

Thomas, the son of Thomas and Jane, had a son by the same name, who had John and Thomas, twins, born in 1762.

The latter died in 1837; the father died in 1773. John, the twin-brother of Thomas, married Jane, the daughter of Sir John Candos Hoskins, Bart. They had a John Candos, of Shipton Court, Oxford County, who was born Oct. 17, 1814, and died July 31, 1851.

He had a daughter Elizabeth, who was married, Feb. 12, 1635, to John Winthrop, jun., the first governor of Connecticut, and settled at New London. He also had a son Thomas, who was one of the first proprietors of New London; and John, who was of New London in 1651. The land granted them was forfeited for not being occupied; and they probably never permanently settled there.

William Reade of Aikenhead had a son by the name of Robert, who was Bishop of Orkney; and a daughter Allison, who married Edward, the son of Sir David Bruce, about the year 1551.

Alexander Reid of Barrie was created a baronet of Nova Scotia in 1706. He married Agnes, the eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Oglevie, Bart., of Forglen; and, dying in 1770, was succeeded by his only son James, who died in 1771, and was succeeded by his son John, who was born in 1760, and married, June 2, 1785, Barbara, the daughter of Thomas Livingston, Esq., M.D., of Downyhills in the county of Aberdeen. His son John, the fourth baronet, had a son Alexander, Nov. 12, 1798; and William, a clergyman, who is the present baronet.

He succeeded his father as second baronet, Feb. 29, 1824; and was Governor of the Bank of England in 1840 and 1841.

William Reade, S.T.P., son of Edward and Isiod, supposed to be born about 1450, had a son Sir William, who married Ann Menis, and had a son William, who married Rebecca, the daughter and coheir of Menis. Their children were Matthew, John, Richard, Thomas, William, and Lucy.

Matthew, Esq., the son of William and Rebecca, married Alice, the daughter of Andrew Ward; and they had William, and a daughter who married Sir Henry Oxinden of Dene, and was heir to half his estate. They also had a daughter Elizabeth, who married Morace Dixwell, Esq., of Broome in the county of Kent. William, the son of Matthew and Alice, married Lucy Henage; and they had John and William. Richard, the son of William and Rebecca, born in 1577, married Joan, daughter of Ralph Dale of London; and they had a son Richard, who lived at Whittlesey; William, and a daughter Rebecca. He was living at London in 1657, aged eighty-seven years. John, the son of William and Rebecca, was knighted in 1641 by Charles I. William, who sailed from Gravesend in 1635, and settled in Weymouth, may have been son of Richard, and grandson of William and Rebecca.

Sir John Reade of Bodington in the county of Gloucester, Knt., had Dorothy, who married Lord Oliver St. John.

Thomas Read was admitted LL.D., May 8, 1638, of New College. He afterwards was a great royalist; and, by his majesty, was nominated Principal of Magdalen College, on the flight of Wilkinson to the Parliament. Afterwards he changed his religion for that of Rome, lived beyond sea, and wrote certain matters against Dr. Edward Bangor.

Thomas Rhead, M.A., of Aberdeen in Scotland, was an author of distinction.

Alexander Rhead, M.A., of Aberdeen, was created Doctor of Physic in the House of Convocation, by virtue of letters of King James I. This learned Scot, who was afterwards one of the College of Physicians in London, and a brother of the Company of Barber-Chirurgeons, has written and published "A Description of the Body of Man," and also "Chirological Lectures" on tumors and ulcers. He was afterwards minister of Yeatley in Hampshire, where he died in 1628.

Thomas Rede, Rector of Agotte St. Lawrence, lost his living; and his family was reduced to such necessities, that some of them came to be maintained by the public charity of the Corporation for Ministers' Widows. One of this name was Rector of Offley in 1617.

John Reade of New College was Fellow of Wykeham College, and made Doctor of Decrees, Jan. 29, 1507. It was granted to Mr. John Rede, M.A., Bachelor of Divinity, and Warden of Wykeham College, near Winchester, that he be created D.D. by a cap put on his head by Dr. Faunteroy, the commissioner, the proctor, and two masters. He had been tutor to Prince Arthur; was then Canon of Chichester; afterwards Warden of New College in Oxon; and Master of the Hospital of St. Mary Magdalen, near Winchester. He was made LL.D. in 1528.

In 1437, Richard, Phillip, and Robert Rede held the manor of Hallbury, in the 7th and 15th of Henry VI.

Simeon Reade was Mayor of Norwich in 1502.

Edmund Reed of Morgansleigh in the county of Devonshire, rector, was once interrupted and abused in the pulpit, and at length deposed when he had been nearly forty years minister in that place. The chief accusation against him was his approval of the "Book of Sports." He lived to be restored, but died soon after.

Charles Read, Esq., built and endowed a celebrated school and hospital at Tuxford on the river Trent. There is at the present time a CHARLES REED, who is a distinguished English author.

There was a Dr. SAMUEL READ of Stafford in England, who, in 1645, furnished one Cook with funds to build a gristmill in Cambridge, Mass., and took a mortgage of the same. Whether this mill was on Charles River, or on a small stream which is in West Cambridge, I have no knowledge; but it was a great enterprise for those days, and controlled the location of highways in that section. He was probably a relative of the Puritan emigrants of the same name, and lived in the vicinity of Boston in England.

There was a John Reade of St. John's College, who was made Bachelor of Divinity, April 10, 1516; and died in 1587, being the Prebendary of Westminster. He was buried in St. John's College Chapel. There was a Thomas Reade, who was Rector of Adcome in Somersetshire, who died about the year 1570. Thomas Reade of Upham married Alice Petre, about the time of Henry VIII. Sir John of Sussex married Bridget, the daughter of Lord Thomas Munson, about the year 1600. Sir John of Bodington had a daughter Dorothy, who married Lord Oliver St. John. There was a George Reede of Leis Garden, who died Feb. 25, 1530; and there is a monument to his memory in Horn Church.

There was a James Reade who was Rector of St. Augustine. Thomas Rhead, M.A., of Aberdeen in Scotland, was an author of distinction. There is a Baron Von Rheede of Von Oudshoorn in Holland; but nothing is known of his pedigree. A Roger Reed of Haverhinge bequeathed large amounts for objects of charity and public utility. There was also a Simeon Reed of the same place. There is one Isaac Reed, Esq., at Hampstead in England, who was a companion of Dr. Johnson.

CHAPTER II.

WILLIAM READE OF BOSTON, AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

WE now arrive at a time when it is difficult to trace the different families, as there was a great rush for America; in consequence of which, some branches became extinct in Europe, and there appeared to be a disposition, on the part of at least some of the Puritan emigrants, to blot out every thing that would connect them with families in Europe. In consequence of this, their descendants lost the means of proving heirship to great estates, and left their posterity in uncertainty and doubt in reference to their ancestry.

The author has devoted much attention to the subject, and is unable to give that assurance which he would like; but is inclined to think that the first by the name of Reed in this country was, —

1.* William, the son of Richard Read of Whittlesey in the county of Kent. He came to America with Gov. Winthrop in 1630, or about that time; and settled first in Weymouth, but removed to Boston. He was engaged in mercantile business, but, a portion of the time, commanded his own vessel. He died on his homeward passage from Ireland, on board the ketch “William and Mary,” of which he was part owner. An inventory of his estate was taken Sept. 23, 1667, in the schedule of which was real estate at the North End and in King Street (now State Street), some broadcloths, a tailor's goose, &c. He probably had done some business as a merchant tailor. His first wife's Christian name was Susan, who died Oct. 12, 1653. He married, for a second wife, a person whose Christian name was Hannah, Nov. 25, 1656. His children were, — Edward, who was born in 1618; John, 1620; Samuel, 1624. These three settled in Marblehead. min Tyler, William, Polly, Rebecca, Martha. He was a cabinet-maker and an innholder. His wife died in 1830.

8. Hon. William, son of Benjamin T. and Mary, married Hannah Hooper. He was a member of Congress. He died suddenly, of apoplexy, Feb. 22, 1837, aged sixty years and six months. This family of Reeds, with their relatives the Hoopers, are among the wealthiest people of Massachusetts, and are also distinguished for high moral religious standing as well as business talents. Benjamin T. was for several years Treasurer of the Eastern Railroad, and his son is one of the Bankers of State Street. Hon. William Reed was a very distinguished man; and his widow survived him till recently, and was known as Madam Reed. She was looked up to in Marblehead as a pattern of piety and virtue. Her abundant wealth enabled her to do much for the poor, and to make her splendid mansion a home to the philanthropist and the destitute.

John, the son of Samuel and Mary, died in 1764, leaving a son by the same name, who administered upon his father's estate, and died in 1773, leaving also a son of the same name, who was a sea-captain, and a large landholder in Windham in the State of Maine. The latter left a widow by the name of Annis. He also had a sister Mary, who married a Malcom. She left a son John. Annis, the widow of Capt. John, married Ebenezer Foster of Boston, May 2, 1778. The town of Windham was first called New Marblehead, probably on account of so many people in Marblehead being proprietors of land in that township.

There was a Mary Reed of Boston who married John Venterman, May 9, 1710. She was doubtless a granddaughter of Capt. William; but I have been unable to ascertain who were her parents. They had a daughter Mary, who married in Boston to Burges Reed of Marblehead, June 8, 1725. Their children were, — Mary, born May 12, 1726; Venterman, baptized in Boston, at the Second Church, May 25, 1729.

CHAPTER III.

COL. THOMAS READ OF SALEM, AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

1. COL. READ is supposed to have been a son of Sir Thomas and Mary Cornwall, of Brocket Hall in Hertfordshire, England. His paternal grandfather had been Clerk of the Green Cloth, and his maternal grandfather was Lord of Strophshire. His elder brother Compton was a baronet. He came to America in the great fleet in 1630, with Winthrop and others, and settled in Salem, Mass. He was made freeman the same year. He had a town-grant of three hundred acres of land in 1637, lying contiguous to that of Gov. Endicutt, and being what now constitutes the celebrated farms of Kendall Osburne, Esq., and the Hon. Ricard S. Rogers, in South Danvers, known many years as the Derby Farms, together with some smaller lots. The first settlers had grants of land in proportion to their amount of funds in the common stock, and their means of cultivating the same. There were but four persons in Salem who had as large grants of land as Col. Read. The name of his wife was Alsea. Their children were Thomas, Jacob, and Abraham; and they were probably born in England. He was a very prominent man in the Colony, and held the rank of colonel as early as 1643, and was probably an officer of that rank before he came to America. He was a colonel in the British Army, at the restoration of Charles II., in 1660. He died in England in 1663, and his son Abraham settled his estate.

2. Jacob, son of Col. Thomas, was probably born in England, and was a freeholder in Salem in 1661, but lived in a house belonging to his father. There is but little known of the descendants of this Jacob. There is a tradition that they at some time went South; and he may have been the ancestor of Gen. Jacob Reade, who was United-States senator from 1795 to 1801; and also of Jacob P. Reed, an attorney-at-law in South Carolina at the present time. He had a son Aaron, who was accidentally shot in Salem, by Joseph Small, when they were out on a hunting excursion, 11th of ninth month, 1670.

2. Abraham, son of Col. Thomas, was probably named for Abraham Palmer, a distinguished emigrant, and in some way related to Col. Read's family. He occupied the farm of his father in South Danvers, and purchased land in Salem in 1677. He had a son Samuel, who returned to England, and was a merchant in London.

3. Samuel, son of Abraham, by his attorney Waitstill Winthrop, sold the farm in South Danvers to Daniel Epps in 1701. He was then described as Samuel Read of London, merchant.

2. Thomas, son of Col. Thomas, was born in England. He married Mary, and probably lived at one time in Lynn. He was appointed ensign, and, in 1647, was made captain, and had several lots of land granted him in Salem, of the class called ten-acre lots.

Children, — Susanna, baptized Sept. 23, 1649; John, June 13, 1651, died young; Mary, April 10, 1653; Elizabeth, May 13, 1655; Remember, April 26, 1657; Jacob, Dec. 22, 1658, died Sept. 19, 1662; Sarah, born at Salem, March 15, 1660, died March 4, 1662; Jacob, 7th of sixth month, 1663; John, 21st of eighth month, 1662; Sarah, Oct. 14, 1665. He probably died soon after the birth of the youngest child, as his wife was known as Widow Mary Read soon after that time. The last known of him is in 1666, when he conveyed some land in Salem to Richard Richards.

3. Jacob, son of Capt. Thomas and Mary, born 7th of sixth month, 1663, married Elizabeth Green, December, 1693. Children,—Aaron, born at Salem, January, 1694, died; John, Dec. 26, 1695; Mary, 1697, married Nathan Proctor, March, 1720; Jacob, Feb. 4, 1699; Jonathan, Jan. 12, 1701; Sarah, May 15, 1703; Elizabeth, March 13, 1704. His will is dated Jan. 5, 1742; and his wife was then living.

3. Jonathan, the son of Jacob and Elizabeth, was born in Salem, Mass., Jan. 12, 1701; and married, first, a Hanson; and married, for second wife, Sarah Kempton, Jan. 1, 1744. His children by his first wife were Benjamin; Hanson; Daniel; John; Jacob, who died in Smithfield, R.I., in October, 1749, and his father settled his estate; William, born in 1729, and settled in North Yarmouth, Me.; and six other children. His children by his second wife were Oliver; Aaron, who died unmarried. Several of his sons by his first wife appear to have settled in or near Rhode Island. He was principal legatee and executor of his father's will; which was dated Jan. 5, 1742.

4. John, the son of Jonathan, married a Hanson; and they had a son David, also George and John.

5. George, the son of John of Salem, lives in Woonsocket Village, and has a son Elisha, who is cashier of a bank.

4. Hanson, the son of Jonathan, had a son of the same name, who was born in 1773, and died in 1830. He married Lucinda Brown, of Cumberland, R.I. He was a clothier.

6. Hanson A., the son of Hanson and Lucinda, born Dec. 10, 1822. Child, — Elizabeth. He lives at North Providence.

CHAPTER IV.

WILLIAM READE OF WOBURN, AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

WILLIAM READE, supposed to be the son of Thomas and Mary of Brocket Hall, was born in 1587, and was the oldest of any of the Puritan emigrants by the name of Reade. He sailed from London in the ship "Defence," in July, 1635; Capt. Edward Fostick, master; and arrived at Boston, Oct. 6, the same year, with his wife, who was Mabel Kendall, born in 1605. Their children, who sailed with them, were — George, born in 1629; Ralph, 1630; and Justice, afterwards Abigail, born in 1633. He settled in Dorchester, but did not remain there. He was made freeman, March 4, 1638. In August, 1639, he sold his real estate in Dorchester to Thomas Clark, and moved to Scituate. He was constable of Scituate in 1644. He sent his wife to Dorchester, on horseback, in 1644, with an infant named Israel, to be baptized; he being a member of the church in that place. His brother Esdras, who had a grant of land from the town of Boston, situated at Muddy River (now Brookline), sold the same to William, who took up his residence upon it, where he lived till 1648; when he bought a farm in Woburn, of Nicholas Davis of Charlestown, and removed to that place. He is the ancestor of the Woburn, Lexington, Bedford, and Burlington Reads; he is also the paternal ancestor of a large portion of the Reeds in Maine; and almost every State in the Union has some of his descendants. His children, born in America, were — Bethia, who married John Johnson, son of Edward, the author of Johnson's "Wonder-working Providence;" Israel; Sarah, who married Samuel Walker, Sept. 10, 1662; Rebecca, who married Joseph Winn. He returned to England, and died at Newcastle-upon-Tyne in 1656. A letter of administration was taken out by his widow, under Oliver Cromwell. She returned to America, and, after finishing the settlement of his estate, married Henry Summers of Woburn, Nov. 21, 1660. She outlived her second husband, and resided with her son George till her death, which took place June 5, 1690, when she was eighty-five years of age.

The following are the copies of two legal instruments in connection with this man, and are a specimen of the style of such documents in those times. The first is intended for a deed, and was found on the records of Suffolk County. It runs thus: —

The bill of sale from Nicholas Davis of Charlestown, to William Reade of Muddy River, of his farm in Woburn, containing fifty acres of upland; four acres of meadow, before the door; four acres of meadow in Rockbrook; and two acres in Brook Meadow; with all barns, outhouses, fences, and all to the same belonging; which is by me an absolute deed of sale.

NICHOLAS DAVIS.

Dated 7. 5. 1648.

The above piece of land is on the old road from Salem to Concord, not far from Kendall's mill. The cellar and well are to be seen at the present time. The land, after being in the possession of his descendants by the name of Read, passed into the hands of the Fowles, who were also his descendants; from them to Col. Baldwin, through his wife, who was a Fowle; and from the Baldwins to Mr. Samuel R. Durant, who is a descendant in a direct line from said William Read, and is the eighth generation from him. He purchased other tracts of land in the vicinity; and his descendants settled upon it, and continue to occupy lands in the vicinity, although much of it is, at this time, held by those bearing other names.

The other instrument, intended for his last will and testament, was written in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in anticipation of his decease; and runs as follows:—

My will is, that my wife Maybel have threescore pounds for herselfe.

Item, That my wife have the household stuffe to dispose of.

Item, That the threescore pounds which is owing me by Mr. William Brenton of Newengland be disposed of as followeth, if it can be got; viz.: To my wife, twenty pounds. Item, To my four youngest children, twenty pounds; that is, five pounds apiece.

Item, To my three children that are married in Newengland, that is, George, Ralph, and Michael, twenty pounds, to be equally divided between them.

Item, That, whenever any of my four youngest children die, their portion be equally divided among the other three; that is, if they die in their minority.

40lb. due me from Mr. Shillingsworth; 20lb. Mark Eaton of Blackeallerton; 30lb. from Mrs. Flora Hall; 20lb. from Anthony Walker; 12lb. 3lb. in my wife's hands, and 6lb. in Mr. Ogggle's hands; 40lb. more in the house. George Errington of Longhouse, and his sonne and his some-in-law, 40 shillings; Sawin Anderson, forty shillings; Mary Chicken, alias Watson, 4lb. 10 shillings, and 10 shillings in my wife's hands, in all ninescore pounds.

The mark of WM. READE.

Witness: WILLIAM CUTTER.

The mark of THOMAS GIBSON.

Oliver, Lord Protector of the Commonwealth of England, Scotland, and Ireland, or the dominions thereto belonging, to Maybel Reade, widow, the relict of William Reade, late of Newcastle-upon-Tyn, deceased, greeting. Whereas the said William Reade made his last will and testament, which is hereunto annexed, and therein made nor constituted no executor, but nominated and appointed the said Maybel Reade, his then wife, principal testatrix; we, therefore, give and grant full power and authority unto you, the said Maybel Reade, widow.

Given at London, under the hand and seal of the Court of Probate of Wills, and granting administration, the last day of October, 1656. Robert Blackford. B. Sunhenge. Nath. Shoucklegs. And seal annexed now, Pesto annexo uli exeant uli nullus.

Mr. — WATSON.

T. M. BLACKFORD.

Entered and recorded, 17. 12. 1661, by

THOMAS DANFORTH, Recorder.

The will is recorded in Middlesex Probate Office, Dec. 16, 1661, vol. i. p. 299.

The amount of estate appraised in England was two hundred pounds. The amount due him from Mr. William Brenton in New England, not appraised, sixty pounds, with what he had advanced to his three older children in America, made in all over three hundred and fifty pounds; and, by including the amount necessary to convey himself and family to England, it would make his estate, at the time he left America, not less than four hundred pounds: which was among the largest estates in New England at that time.

The name of Michael appears to have been a mistake of the recorder for Abigail, as he had no son by that name; but his third child, born in England in 1633, and entered at the time he embarked for America by the name of Justus, was changed to Abigail, who married Francis Wyman as his second wife, and was living in Woburn at the demise of her father. One of her great-great-grandsons, by the name of Edward Wyman, died in Pelham, N.H., Dec. 1, 1856, aged eighty-four, having been born in 1772.

2. George, son of William and Maybel, born in England, 1629, bought a farm in Woburn of Rebecca Terrae, Nov. 7, 1651. Married Elizabeth Gennings, or Gennison, of Watertown, Aug. 4, 1651; bought land in Weymouth, April 16, 1665. Children, — Elizabeth, born July 26, 1653, married David Fiske, of Watertown, Dec. 15, 1675, a distinguished surveyor of land; twins, not named, born in 1654; Samuel, born April 29, 1656, married Elizabeth Mousal of Charlestown, April 19, 1679; Abigail, born June 27, 1658, married Nathaniel Richardson, Sept. 18, 1694; George, born Sept. 14, 1660, married Abigail Pierce, Feb. 18, 1684; William, born Sept. 22, 1662, married Abigail Kendall, May 24, 1686, his father's cousin; Sarah, born Feb. 12, 1664, married a Robinson, Dec. 12, 1685. George's wife, Elizabeth, died Feb. 26, 1664; and he married Hannah Rockwell of Charlestown, Nov. 9, 1665. Children, — Hannah, born Feb. 18, 1669, married an Elson; John, born March 18, 1671, married Ruth Johnson, June 10, 1697; Mary, born June 15, 1674, married Nathan Johnson, 1697; Timothy, born Oct. 20, 1678, married Persis Kendal, his second cousin; Thomas, born July 15, 1682, married Sarah Sawyer, Feb. 1, 1704. George is mentioned in Robert Gennison's will, in 1690. The farm on which he lived is now owned by Nathan Blanchard, Esq., in what is now Burlington. He was a large landholder and a wealthy man. His children formed marriage alliances with the first families in the vicinity. He settled his sons around him in what is now Woburn Westside, Burlington, and Lexington. His house stood where Esquire Blanchard's carriage-house now stands. He was deacon of the church in Woburn; and died Feb. 21, 1706, aged seventy-seven.

2. Ralph, son of William and Maybel, born 1630 in England; married Mary Pierce, daughter of Anthony Pierce of Watertown. His name appears upon the records of Woburn, March 31, 1654. Children, — John, born in 1660, married Elizabeth Holden, March 21, 1682; Joseph; William, born 1658; David —; Daniel; Timothy, born Feb. 14, 1664, died Jan. 12, 1729; Jonathan, died May 5, 1710;

Mary, who married Benjamin Pierce. His wife died Feb. 18, 1700. He occupied the farm bought by his father of Nicholas Davis, but afterwards owned and lived on the farm known in the present century as the Sylvanus Wood Farm. He died Jan. 4, 1711.

6. Israel, son of William and Maybel, born 1642. On the 11th of July, 1660, with the consent of his mother, he bound himself, till he should be twenty-one years of age, to learn the tailor's trade; which was a business peculiar to the Reeds of that century. Married Mary, daughter of Francis Kendall, his own cousin. Children, — Mary, born Aug. 15, 1670, married Matthew Johnson; Rebecca, born July 2, 1678, married John Wyman, Jan. 28, 1697; Elizabeth, born Oct. 22, 1681, married Richard Snow, Jan. 1, 1706; Ruth, born Nov. 6, 1683; Israel, March 17, 1687, married Hannah Johnson, June 1, 1707; Jemima, born July 23, 1689; Patience, Dec. 3, 1697, married Jeremiah Whittemore of Weston, March 15, 1722, and died Oct. 24, 1745. The elder Israel died June 25, 1711: his wife died Jan. 17, 1721. He lived and owned where the Baptist Meeting-house now stands, in Woburn. The house was taken down, about the year 1830, to make room for the church. He likewise owned a small house where Mr. Bucknam's store now stands, running back to the burying-ground; and a small lot on the other side of the street, with a shop on it, called Under the Rock, adjoining the town-pound and the king's highway. His farming land was situated in that part of the town towards Reading. Jan. 6, 1699, one Joseph Whittemore owned and occupied the place with his mother, Elizabeth Pierce. They sold it to George Read. It was owned and occupied by some of his descendants till it was purchased for the Baptist Society. Israel Reed was an innholder.

The civil authority had the body taken from its resting-place, and he was required to touch the body; it being the general belief, that, if the murderer was made to touch the murdered body, there would be some miraculous demonstration of his guilt. But there was no such demonstration; and Mr. Thompson, the recording magistrate, made entry that some people went home satisfied, and that others were dissatisfied. Mr. Reed, however, married Mrs. Prudence Hayward. He lived on a portion of the old farm of his father. He was one of the principal original proprietors of Monadnoc No. 4, now Fitzwilliam, in New Hampshire; and did much for the growth and prosperity of the town. He was captain in Col. Blanchard's regiment, serving under Sir William Johnson against the French and Indians near Lake George; and his military experience, energy of character, and commanding appearance, gave him a great influence over his relatives in Middlesex and Worcester Counties. They rallied with him, in almost countless numbers, at their country's call, and reddened the soil of Lexington and Charlestown with their blood. He commanded the second regiment at the battle of 'Bunker Hill, and a hundred and sixty-six of his regiment were killed or wounded. He was in the battle of Bennington, West Point, Valley Forge, and New Jersey. He was the first brigade general appointed by the Provincial Congress. Eight of his townsmen were killed in Bunker-Hill battle. His oldest son James was in the army with him, and was a prisoner at Quebec. The elder James married Mary Farer of Framingham for his second wife, daughter of Major John Farer, born Jan. 8, 1742. Mr. Duren died on the farm formerly owned by the grandfather, Timothy Reed. The widow still resides in the same place; and her three sons live on the same farm, and also own the farm adjoining, formerly the residence of the great-grandfather of Mrs. Duren, Jacob Reed; the house upon it having been built by her great-grandfather Timothy, and the land given to Timothy by his father, Deacon George Reed, the first of Woburn, by deed, bearing date March 15, 1700. His father had then owned it several years, so that some portion of this property has been in the hands of the same family nearly two hundred years; and, though it is now out of the name, the Reeds have no cause of complaint, as the present incumbents have fitted up the houses and out-buildings in excellent taste. They have also covered the land over with a vast number of fruit-trees; and the land, in every respect, shows the hand of the skilful cultivator. These houses and farms now are known as Durenville; and it is truly a delightful spot, — rich in every thing that makes farms attractive. The Duren Family also own the farm which was bought by William Reed, the father of George, in 1648, by deed, from Nicholas Davis. It is two hundred and ten years since this last-named farm came into the family of Reed; and though it passed out of the name more than a hundred years ago, yet it has been in the descendants of William Reed the most of the time. It passed, first, from the Reeds to the Fowles, but not without marriage alliance; and from Fowle to Col. Baldwin. Baldwin's wife was Margery Fowle, married May 19, 1791. It afterwards passed into the hands of Capt. Fox. His mother was Elizabeth Reed, who married Thomas Fox, March 31, 1763. The buildings upon this farm have long been gone, and the farm mostly turned to pasturing; and a good growth of wood has been cut from where the first William Reed, and his children after him, were wont to swing their scythes. The old cellar and well are yet remaining to call the mind back through the centuries that are past.

Children,—Elizabeth, born Feb. 2, 1733; Mary, Feb. 22, 1734; Timothy, Aug. 30, 1736, settled in Putney, Vt.; Eleazer. He moved from Chelmsford to Dunstable, when that was the name of a tract comprising Dunstable, Nashua, Nashville, Hollis, and parts of the towns of Pelham, Londonderry, Hudson, Merrimac, and Townsend; making in all about two hundred square miles, which constituted for many years the northern frontier, where many savage outrages were committed by the Indians, and many deeds of valor and heroism were performed by the whites. It was from this region that Lovell and a portion of his men came; and Timothy Read was one of the number selected, after Lovell's Fight at Pigmarket, to go and scout for Indians, and bury those who were killed in the fight. While pursuing that object, they espied something in the bushes, which they supposed was an Indian; and Mr. Read was selected, on account of being a superior marksman, to fire; which he did. The sequel shows that he had shot a neighbor by the name of Whitney, who had been wounded in the fight, and crawled into the bushes to prevent being discovered by Indians. This event cast a shade of melancholy over the feelings of Mr. Reed, which he hardly forgot through life. The following scrap may give the reader some idea of the times in which this man and his associates lived:—

“Old Dunstable was a very different town from that which at present passes by that name. It was settled in 1673, and included more than two hundred square miles, embracing the towns of Nashua, Nashville, Hudson, and Hollis, in New Hampshire; besides Dunstable and Tyngsborough, Mass.; also portions of Amherst, Milford, Merrimac, Litchfield, Londonderry, Pelham, and Brookline, N.H.; and parts of Pepperell and Townsend, Mass. Dunstable figured quite prominently in the Indian wars and in that of the Revolution. Those who are curious in reference to these and other matters can gain a full knowledge of them in Fox's History of the old township of Dunstable.

“A few particulars of the olden times may interest the general reader. The following were the expenses of the funeral of James Blanchard, a farmer in tolerable circumstances, who died in Dunstable in 1704: Paid for a winding-sheet, 18s.; for a coffin, 10s.; for digging grave, 7s. 6d.; for the use of the pall, 5s.; for gloves (to distribute at the funeral), £1. 1s.; for wine, cigars, and spice (at the funeral), £1. 5s. 9d.; for the doctor, 14s. 9d.; for attendance, expenses, &c., £1. 17s. 5d.

“So great was the alarm from the frequent incursions of the Indians, that the inhabitants lived chiefly in garrisons as late as 1711. There were then seven garrisons, termed Col. Jonathan Tyng's, Mr. Henry Farwell's, Mr. John Cummings's, Col. Samuel Whiting's, Mr. Thomas Lands's, Queen's Garrison, and Mr. John Lollendine's. They contained thirteen families, seven male inhabitants, nineteen soldiers, — a total of eighty-six persons.

“So perilous were the times, that Dunstable was scarcely more advanced in 1714 than it was in 1680. ‘Many of the most useful inhabitants had been slain or taken captive, — heads of families especially. Some had removed to places more secure from Indian depredation, and had deserted all.’”

He was a tailor, as was his father Thomas, and great-grandfather Esdras; and it was a trade that was common among the first generations of Reads in this country. The Reads in and about Boston in Lincolnshire were among the first who went into the trade of cloth after the influx of the French Huguenots into England. One branch of the business was to make the cloth into wearing apparel, constituting what we call merchant tailors; and the first emigrants of Reads to this country brought their tools with them for making clothing.

Leland of Saco, Me. He was for several years Agent of the Land and Water Company at Manchester, N.H.; but died at Nashua, leaving a great estate; and was called one of the rich men of New Hampshire. The following biographical sketch of Mr. Read has been contributed by his son, Dr. William Read: —

Robert Read was born in Amherst, N.H., on what is now called the "Fletcher Farm," situated about three miles north of the village, on the banks of the Souhegan River,—a stream abounding in mill-sites, and which has contributed in no small degree to the prosperity of the region through which it flows. His grandfather, Robert Read, moved from Litchfield to Amherst at an early date; and, during the Revolutionary War, held a commission of lieutenant-colonel, with authority to raise a troop of horse. His father, William Read, was an active and influential citizen of the town; and for many years served as deputy-sheriff, in which capacity he acquired a widespread reputation for his success in executing the duties of his office. It was the intention of his father that Robert should prepare himself, by a suitable course of education, for one of the learned professions; and, to this end, he was entered as a student at Exeter Academy, then under the charge of the famous Master Abbott. The bent of his mind, however, was to a more active life; and, leaving the academy, he was apprenticed to Daniel Hayden, a merchant in Chelmsford, Mass. Here he remained till his majority; when, returning to his native town, he associated himself with his father in business, under the firm of William Read and Son. The energy and tact of Mr. Read soon raised the firm to a commanding position, and, for many years, made their store the centre of trade for a large territory. Upon the dissolution of this firm, consequent upon the retirement of the senior partner, Mr. Read formed a new connection with Isaac Spalding; and continued the business at the old stand, with increasing success, till the growth of Nashua, and the development of the manufacturing facilities at that place, induced the latter to establish himself there, when the business was continued in the name of Mr. Read alone. It may be remarked here, that the business talent of Mr. Spalding soon placed him in a conspicuous and commanding position in his new location; and he now ranks among the wealthiest men of his State. Up to the period of which we are speaking, the prosperity of Amherst had been constantly increasing. The shire-town of Hillsborough County, — it was here that the courts were held, and the county business transacted. The great stage route from the north, through the centre of the State to the seaboard, which took this place on its way, also gave it an advantage over the less-favored towns on either side. But, as the manufacturing interest developed, other places, more favored by nature, began to dispute its supremacy: and with the rise of Nashua and Manchester on the south and east, and the increase of Milford on the west, came the decline of Amherst, and the withdrawal of almost the entire trade, except what was supplied by the wants of its own inhabitants; and of this, even, scarce a moiety remained. From a busy mart, its streets thronged with purchasers from all the towns around, it has changed to one of the quietest of country villages. Its echoes are seldom awakened by the bustle of traffic, and the dust lies undisturbed along its highways. The energy and activity which marked his character, joined to a most scrupulous regard for equity and justice, which gained him the confidence of all who knew him, from an early period gained for Mr. Read the suffrages of his fellow-citizens for various offices of public trust. He held the responsible position of town-clerk for thirteen successive years, — from 1817 to 1828 inclusive. In 1826, he was elected representative to the State Legislature, where he served three terms; being re-elected in 1827 and 1828. In the latter year, he was appointed aide-de-camp by Gov. John Bell, with the rank of colonel. In military affairs he was also an active and influential participator. He served in every capacity, from private to commander, in the West Company of Infantry, — one of the most efficient companies of the State; and in 1814, at the time of the threatened invasion by the British, while lieutenant, accompanied it to Portsmouth as its commander, — his senior officer not being able to leave home. In 1835, Mr. Read removed to Nashua to assume the duties of Agent of the Nashua Manufacturing Company; a position he remained in two years. At the expiration of that time (1837) he was appointed general manager of the Land and Water-power Company, which had recently purchased extensive tracts of land at the Amoskeag Falls in Manchester, and from which the present city of that name dates its origin. In this capacity he continued fourteen years, till 1852; when he resigned, and took up his residence once more in Nashua, where he remained till his death. In 1851, he was elected a member of the Convention for the revision of the Constitution of the State, and represented Manchester in that capacity. Of his conduct while in office at Manchester, says the author of the History of that city, “he performed his duties faithfully to the company by which he was employed, as every one will testify who had business with him. Strictly a business-man, he mingled very little with other than business-men; and hence was very little identified with interests disconnected with the corporation: yet no measure connected with the progress of our city escaped his attention; and he most heartily co-incided in all that liberal course of policy, on the part of the treasurer and the directors, that has added so much of beauty and value to our city.”

After his removal to Nashua, he was once elected a representative from that place to the State Legislature; was a member of the first Board of Aldermen elected under the city charter; and was President of the Nashua and Lowell Railroad Company until a few months before his death, when, warned by increasing infirmities of his approaching dissolution, he resigned.

8. William, son of Robert of Nashua, and Rebecca, born Jan. 29, 1820; graduated at Dartmouth College in 1839; M.D. Harvard University, 1842; married Sarah A. F. McLellan, June 22, 1843. Children, — William, born in Lynn, Oct. 4, 1844; Frederick French, born in Lynn, May 23, 1847; Robert McLellan, born in Boston, Sept. 6, 1848; Charles French, born in Boston, Sept. 17, 1853. He is a celebrated physician, and practises his profession in Boston. He lives at No. 713, Washington Street.

8. Abby Greeley, daughter of Robert of Nashua, and Rebecca, born March 4, 1822; married to Rev. Jonas B. Clark of Swampscott, Jan. 11, 1843. Children, — Helen Rebecca, born East Windsor, Ct., May 9, 1844, died in Boston, Oct. 11, 1848; Henry Fields, born in Swampscott, Nov. 28, 1846, died in Manchester, N.H., Oct. 18, 1848; Arthur French, born in Swampscott, Aug. 4, 1849; Helen Grafton, born in Swampscott, July 8, 1851; Grace Blanchard, born in Swampscott, July 14, 1853. Mr. Clark is grandson and namesake of Rev. Jonas Clarke, who was pastor of the church in Lexington at the time of Lexington Fight; the intimate friend of John and Samuel Adams; and brother-in-law of John Hancock. The venerable pastor, on the night previous to the fight, sheltered his three mysterious friends from the chilling damp of night; and, when his house was no longer a safe retreat, they were conveyed to the house of the minister of Woburn Precinct. From thence, a house in the wood near the line of Billerica was their safe retreat. Their heads being considered of greater value to the British than such heads as grew on the shoulders of some other men, a large reward was offered for them. The house in Woburn Precinct, now Burlington, where one part of this affair took place, is now occupied by the venerable Rev. Samuel Sewell, a celebrated genealogist and antiquarian, and a descendant of the celebrated Samuel Sewell of olden time. The Rev. Samuel Sewell married the daughter of the Rev. Mr. Merritt, who was a young man settled over the church in Woburn Precinct, a few months before the battle of Lexington; and was at that time boarding with Mrs. Jones, the widow of the former pastor. He afterwards married Mrs. Jones's daughter. It was Mr. Merritt who piloted the three guests to their hiding-place in the woods. The house has been in the family a hundred and six years, and the occupants have been the three successive pastors of the parish during that period. It is truly venerable in appearance as well as age, and is much enhanced in its attractions by the large and overtopping shade-trees, and interesting reminiscences which the venerable pastor and happy family attach to the buildings and trees and other objects connected with the place. If I were to give a young clergyman, about to settle in life, my advice, one portion of it would be to make it in his way to visit this spot, and see illustrated by every thing about him the peaceful and happy effect of piety and refinement, accompanied with true politeness and hospitality. The influence of such a family in a parish must be truly valuable. The house of the Rev. Mr. Clarke is still standing, about one-fourth of a mile north of the monument in Lexington. It is somewhat dilapidated, but still shows that it is, or has been, the dwelling of no ordinary personage. The front-yard is somewhat overgrown with ancient lilacs. It has been occupied, since the decease of Mr. Clarke, by his daughters.

CHAPTER VI.

JOHN READ OF REHOBOTH, AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

1. JOHN READ of Rehoboth came to America with the great fleet in 1630. He is supposed to be son of William by his wife Lucy Henage; and was brother to William of Weymouth. He was born in 1598. The first that is known of him, after his arrival, was in Weymouth, in 1637. He was of Dorchester in 1638, and went from there to Braintree (now Quincy). In 1643 or '4, he went with Rev. Mr. Newman and his church to Rehoboth. His name is the third on the list of purchasers of that township. He was a man of large property for those times, and held the office of constable, which was the chief executive office in town. He lived at what was called the Rim, which is now in Seekonk. Ancient Rehoboth was divided into seven towns; viz., Rehoboth, Attleborough, Seekonk, Pawtucket, Swansey, Barrington, and Cumberland. Many of his descendants are still living within the bounds of ancient Rehoboth. He kept a public-house, and was a prominent and leading man. There is a record that Richard Ponton was "put" to John Read in 1644. Mrs. Read's Christian name was Sarah. He died Sept. 7, 1685, aged eighty-seven; and his gravestone is standing in Seekonk old burying-yard, inscribed "J. R., æt. 87. D. S. 1685." It appears that, at one time, she was absent in Europe for a considerable time ; and, on her return, brought with her an infant child, pretending that it was one which she had adopted : but it was proved to be hers ; and she was sentenced by the court to stand in some conspicuous place for a certain length of time, to wear a badge significant of the crime, and to be gazed upon by the populace. John, son of Samuel and Hopestill of Mendon, born about 1673 ; graduated at Cambridge in 1697, and was a distinguished preacher. The following is related of him in the Connecticut Historical Collections : “ A Mr. Walker and Mr. Reed were both preaching at Hartford ; and, about the time of the first settlement of the town of Woodbury, there was some controversy, which of the two licentiates should go with the emigrants to Woodbury : and they were requested to deliver a discourse on the day when it was to be decided, — Mr. Walker in the forenoon, and Mr. Reed in the afternoon. Mr. Walker took for his text, ‘ What went ye out into the wilderness for to see ? — a reed shaken with the wind.’ He enlarged upon the circumstance and propriety of a reed being found in the wilderness, &c. Mr. Reed, in the afternoon, took for his text, ‘ Your adversary, the Devil, walketh about,’ &c. In the course of his observations, he stated that the great adversary of men was a great walker ; and, instead of remaining with the brethren, ought to be kept walking at a distance from them. The result was, that Mr. Reed was retained at Hartford. He, however, was soon after in Fairfield County, where he was a great landholder. He preached a portion of the time at New Milford ; and, in 1699, was preaching at Waterbury, but refused to be settled. He was engaged in a long and tedious law-suit about the title of a tract of land in the centre of New Milford, which he claimed to have bought of the Indians. He built a dwelling-house upon it, near where the Town House now stands, and lived there a while to hold possession and defend his title ; and, after he moved away, his house was used for some years as a place of public worship. His experience in the law probably convinced him that he was better calculated for the forum than the pulpit ; and he afterward practised law with great success in Boston. He married Ruth. Children, — John, born in 1700 ; William ; Ruth, who married Rev. Mr. Hann, the minister of Fairfield ; Mary, who married, and moved to Halifax, N.S. ; Abigail ; and Deborah. At the time of his death, he owned a mansion-house in Green Street, Boston, now Court Street ; which, in the division of his estate, was set off to his son William, who was a lawyer, but died unmarried. He also owned large tracts of land in Fairfield, which then embraced what is now the county of Fairfield ; and his son John, and son-in-law Mr. Hann, settled upon it. He owned also, at the time of his death in 1749, the township of Ware in Massachusetts, which had been granted to certain persons in Narraganset for military services ; and he bought it of them for two coppers per acre, and a tract in Wellington, now Dayton, and several other townships, one of which he bought at auction of the town of Boston in 1637, for which he paid about $3,600. He had one township at the time of his death, which was called the Manor of Peace, probably from the fact that he held peaceable possession of it without a lawsuit. He published a grammar and some political essays, and was unquestionably the greatest lawyer of his time. He was also a man of ardent and devoted piety, though somewhat eccentric in his manners. He was called, by the people of Boston, Leather-jacket John, to distinguish him from the other John Reeds. The following tribute to his memory, taken from "Knap's Biographical Sketches," will illustrate his character and worth : —

"John Reed was distinguished for genius ; beloved by the votaries of literature ; revered by the contemporary patriots of his country ; the pride of the bar ; the light of the law ; and chief among the wise, the witty, and the eloquent. One who lived long and did much ; but of whom so little is matter of record, that a single page would contain all that is written of him. It is painful to think that a man so proudly pre-eminent among his peers should now be buried in obscurity. Tradition, it is true, is stored with anecdotes of him; but we look in vain for written memorials. He graduated at Cambridge in 1697. He studied divinity, and was for some time a popular preacher; but not liking the religious dogmas of that day, or fearing that he should not be able to restrain his wit or keep his gravity at some instance of solemn foolery, or perhaps feeling that he was destined for a more extended sphere of action, he left that profession for the law. The last of his years are distinctly remembered by two votaries of the law, who are now living (for he did not die till 1749); and those living chronicles confirm the statement, that the numerous anecdotes of him which have come down to us were current soon after his decease.

“To prove that he was a profound lawyer, not trammelled by the mere letter of the law nor confused by its prolixity, it is only necessary to look at his legal labors which are now extant. One act alone should give him immortality. He, from his own high responsibility, reduced the quaint, redundant, and obscure phraseology of the English deeds of conveyance to the present short, clear, and simple form now in use among us. Forms seemingly prolix have generally their use; and most lawyers are attached to them from habit, and from a belief that it is better to be tautological, than obscure from too much brevity. His influence and authority must have been great, as a lawyer, to have brought these retrenched forms into general use. The declarations which he made and used in civil actions, have, many of them, come down to us as precedents, and are among the finest specimens of special pleading which can be found. Story has preserved some of his forms: and Parsons used to say, that many other lawyers had assumed his works, as a special pleader, as their own; and that the honors due him had, by carelessness or accident, been given to others, who had only copied his forms. In speaking of Reed's knowledge of the science of special pleading, Judge Trowbridge related an anecdote to a gentleman of the bar, now living. The facts show sagacity and cunning,—then the great requisites for distinction; and which, at all times, have their weight in making up a lawyer's character. A merchant of Salem or Boston, who had a ship and cargo seized for breach of the revenue-laws, applied to Reed for advice. Reed told him to replevy the ship and cargo; and a writ of replevin was made out, with the forms prescribed by the old Province law, commanding the plaintiff, upon his giving bond, to answer the cost and damages at the next Court of Common Pleas, and respond the judgment finally given thereon; and summon the seizing officer to appear, and show cause why he had driven away and impounded the ship and cargo. As the abating of writs seemed at that time to be a great part of the practice, Reed intentionally had given the defendant in replevin no addition, or else the wrong one. On the day of the sitting of the court, the plaintiff in replevin came and told Reed that the counsel for the defendant had found a flaw in the writ, and intended to have the writ abated. Reed endeavored to calm the feelings of his client; and, without letting him into the secret of his intentions, told him to enter his writ. Upon the sitting of the court, the counsel for defendant reached across the table, and whispered to Reed, informing him of the mistake made in the writ, and that he intended to have it abated. Reed, having examined the writ, and finding the error, desired him to let him amend; but he refused. Reed then told him, if he would not let him amend, he could not help it; but he must plead it in writing, for sometimes such pleas were made ore tenus, praying that the writ might abate, and for costs, without requesting a return of the ship and cargo: and judgment was rendered accordingly. Then Reed told his client to let execution come out against him, and, when the officer came to serve it, to pay it, and not before. At the next term, suit was brought on the bond, and Reed prayed oyer of the bond and condition; and pleaded in bar, that he had fully complied, and performed its condition by entering and prosecuting the suit to final judgment, and by paying the execution; in proof of which, he produced the sheriff's return on the same. The merchant having sent his ship to sea upon her restoration thereof to him by the writ of replevin, there was an end of the cause.

“As a legislator, he was conspicuous for several years; but so unambitious a man could not have been a regular leader of faction. He spoke with frankness, regardless of political consequences. A great man who condescends to enter into the politics of the day, and bear the heat and burthen of it, owes nothing to the public for his honors; but the public are much indebted to him for his exertions.

“After having been for some time in the House of Representatives, he was elected to the Council when Shirley was in the chair, and there passed the same upright course. Belcher, the predecessor of Shirley, had persuaded his council, that, upon the appointment of a new Governor, it was necessary to renew all civil commissions. This same thing was proposed by Shirley, and the precedent brought up; but Mr. Reed, a very eminent lawyer, and, which is more, a person of great integrity and firmness of mind, being then a member of the Council, brought such arguments against the practice, that a majority of the Board refused to consent to it (Hutchinson, vol. ii.).

“His method of managing causes, his terse arguments, his cutting irony, his wittiness, and his good nature too, were well known to that generation of lawyers to which Gridley, Trowbridge, and Pinchon belonged; and facts illustrating his powers and disposition were familiar to the next, — to Lowell, Parsons, and those just gone.

“It is related of him, that at one time he travelled South; and there being no conveyance by stage or railroad, and not much communication in any way between the North and South, he adopted the safest and most feasible mode of travel for the times, — which was to obtain a dress of the plainest and most unostentatious kind, — and with his change of linen in his pack, and his walking-stick, sat out on foot. It was from this circumstance that he acquired the name of Leather Jacket, by which he was sometimes called.

“During his journey, he arrived in a country village, which happened to be the shire-town; and the court was in session. There was a cause about to be tried, in which the plaintiff was a poor man, and unable to pay such fees as were demanded by counsel, and appeared there without any. The defendant was rich and influential, and had able counsel. Mr. Reed listened to the discussion going on in relation to the case, at the public-house, during the evening; and, in the morning, intimated to the plaintiff, that he had discovered the points in his case, and might render him some service, but without making himself known to him. The plaintiff readily availed himself of his assistance: and Mr. Reed appeared and opened the case, and won it, very much to the surprise of all present; and immediately, without any pay for his valuable services, left the court-house, — he to pursue his journey, and they to wonder who the mysterious stranger could be. Like Galileo and Bacon, Mr. Reed was too far in advance of the age in which he lived to have been sufficiently honored in his generation; and it is to be deplored that he had no honest chronicler to have traced him from the cradle to the grave, however homely the record might at this time appear."

John, son of Hon. John of Boston, went to Connecticut, and settled in the North Parish of Fairfield; the county of Fairfield being then one town. He was one of the first and principal settlers; and when it was incorporated into a town in May, 1767, it was named Reading in honor of him. He was a military character, and held a colonel's commission; but, like his father and grandfather, was a very pious man, and occasionally preached. He had a deer-park, about a mile north of the Town House. He died in 1786, aged eighty-six; and his monument is to be seen, a little west of the Town House. His descendants are numerous in Connecticut, New York, Vermont, and many of the Western States; and the peculiar features in the character of Hon. John Reed are strongly imprinted upon his posterity. He married two wives, one of which was a Milford lady; by whom he had the following children: viz.,—William, Zalmon, Luke, and Huldah. Married, for second wife, Sarah Bradley, Dec. 17, 1750, of Greenfield Hill. Luke, the son of Col. John, fell into a burning coal-pit in the year 1739, and was so badly burned that he survived but a few hours. His father wrote a letter to Ruth, his mother, in Boston, informing his parents of the melancholy event; and his father sent back a letter in reply. Both of the letters are yet preserved, after a period of a hundred and twenty years; and are both remarkable for the piety and Christian resignation manifested in them, and form a complete index to the turn of mind, and Christian graces, so strongly exhibited in the writers.

The following is taken from "Memorials of Deceased Friends of New-England Yearly Meeting," published by the meeting for sufferings, 1849:—

"Although considerable time has elapsed since the decease of our aged and worthy friend Noah Read, yet the remembrance of him is still fresh in our minds; and we believe it right to preserve the following testimony concerning him. He was born in Attleborough, State of Massachusetts, the 22d of ninth month, 1757, of parents not in profession with Friends; and, in the thirty-first year of his age, he was received a member of Falmouth Monthly Meeting, of which this Monthly Meeting was then a part. Of his previous life, little has come to our knowledge; but from this time he appears to have engaged in the cause of truth and righteousness in the earth, and was concerned that his life and conversation might be answerable to the profession he was making. He was, for many years, more or less occupied as a teacher of the youthful members of our society, in the common branches of school-learning; which service he performed much to the satisfaction of his friends. He was a zealous friend of the Aborigines of this country: and, when the situation of the Penobscot tribe engaged the attention of our Yearly Meeting, he was early appointed one of the committee to look into their situation; and, for many years, gave much personal attention to that concern. He often visited them at their location; going from cabin to cabin, and endeavoring to turn their attention to their religious duties, and to instruct them in the arts of civilized life. In 1800, he was appointed an elder; which station he filled till his death."

The testimony is continued to considerable length, and signed by the clerks; but, for want of room, I pass over the remainder.

Col. John Read, from Rhode Island, was undoubtedly one of the descendants of John of Rehoboth, who stands at the head of this chapter; but I have no means of tracing his genealogy. He was the first white settler in the town of Erie, in Erie County, and State of Pennsylvania, in 1795, where he traded. A public-house in that place is known as the Read House, in honor of him. He left a son Rufus S. Read, who is President of the Erie Bank.

CHAPTER VII.

ELIAS READ, AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

1. ELIAS, who is supposed to be a son of William Reade of Maidstone, in the county of Kent, professor of divinity, and his wife Lucy, was born in 1595; and the first that is known of him is in Woburn, Mass. He had sons William and Philip, who were both born in England.

2. Philip, the son of Elias, was born in 1623. He married Abigail. Their children were—Philip, born March 13, 1671; Jacob, Jan. 30, 1673; Abigail, Oct. 26, 1675; Amy, June 3, 1678. He was a physician, and settled first in Lynn. In 1669, he made a complaint against Margaret, the wife of John Gifford, for witchcraft. The complaint was not fully sustained; and, the Gifford Family being influential (Mr. Gifford being agent of the iron-works,—an important position in those times), it operated against the popularity of Dr. Reed; and he, the next year, moved to Concord, where he practised his profession many years. The unhappy effects of his controversy at Lynn followed him to Concord, where he was bitterly persecuted by or through the influence of the Gifford Family, and at one time went to jail for something growing out of it. He was one of the trustees of the estate of John Proctor of Salem, appointed in 1689. This Mr. Proctor is supposed to be the father of the person of the same name who was hung at Salem, for witchcraft, in 1692;

the principal evidence which contributed to his conviction being the testimony of the celebrated Cotton Mather, D.D., who testified that he had seen evil spirits come behind Mr. Proctor, and hold conversation with him, during the trial. Dr. Reed had an extensive practice in Concord, and many other towns in the counties of Middlesex and Essex. He died at Concord, May 10, 1696 : his wife died April 16, 1709.

Hon. NATHAN READ was born at Western (now Warren), in the county of Worcester, Mass., July 2, 1759. He was the son of Major Reuben Read, who was born at Sudbury, Mass., Nov. 2, 1730, and who held the rank of major in a regiment of minute-men, in the Revolutionary War, raised under the command of Major-Gen. Ward. After the capture of Burgoyne's army at Saratoga, Major Read was detailed by Gen. Heath, who then had the command of the eastern division of the army, to take the charge of the Hessian and British troops, then prisoners of war at Cambridge; and who soon after removed them to Rutland, in the county of Worcester. He (Reuben) was the son of Capt. Nathaniel Read, who was one of the early settlers of Warren; took up a large tract of land there; and who, under his good management, and taste for agricultural life, soon rendered his farm very productive and valuable. In early life he learned the carpenter's trade, and always kept on hand a good set of tools, which enabled him to make his own farming utensils and erect his own buildings ; which at that early day, when mechanical labor was difficult to be had, was a matter of no small moment to him. He had the reputation of being a man of great industry and perseverance, and proverbially just in all his dealings and transactions in life. He died June 9, 1785, at the advanced age of eighty-one years. He resided upon a portion of the farm throughout his life, and made agriculture his employment, save the time he spent in the Revolutionary service. He was a man of much activity, and fixedness of purpose. He died at his residence in Warren, May 26, 1803, in the seventy-third year of his age ; leaving five sons, among whom Nathan was the second.

The grandmother's maiden name was Phebe Lamb. She was a woman noted for her benevolence and piety. The mother's maiden name was Tamison Eastman, from Enfield, Conn. : she was cousin to Gen. Green of Rhode Island, who, in the Revolution, was next in command to Gen. Washington.

Nathan resided at home with his parents, and occasionally with his grandparents, until he was fifteen years of age, and worked on the farm ; their farms being distinct, but adjoining each other. In the autumn of 1776, having previously had but very little opportunity, he was sent to Rev. Samuel Willard's school, at Stafford, about three months ; where he was taught arithmetic, English grammar, and Burr's Latin grammar. He then returned home, and attended the town-school about two months, kept by Mr. Dwight Foster, an undergraduate of Brown University. The spring following, he went to Mr. Nathan Goddard's private school, in Shrewsbury ; where he commenced the study of Greek. Mr. Goddard being soon after called away to preach for several months as a candidate for the ministry, he was under the necessity of seeking a new instructor ; and entered the school of a clergyman in a neighboring town, prosecuted his Greek, and prepared himself, as far as he could under the disadvantages and limited time that was allowed him, to enter college. At the close of the summer vacation in 1777, less than a year from the time he commenced his preparatory studies, he appeared before the Board of Examiners at Harvard University as a candidate for admission. Caleb Gannett and Benjamin Guild were his examiners : they found him qualified, and he was then admitted to the university. As his parents were desirous that he should qualify himself for the ministry, he attended Prof. Sewall's lectures on the Hebrew language, and acquired so much knowledge of it as to be appointed to deliver a Hebrew oration at a public exhibition: and, during the interval between the death of Prof. Sewall and the appointment of Mr. Parsons as his successor, he was requested to instruct such students as wished to learn the Hebrew language; which he accordingly did, and was handsomely rewarded for his services. Previous to commencement in 1781, at which time he graduated, he was selected by his classmates to deliver a valedictory address on a fixed day, in compliance with a long-established custom of the university.

After commencement, he went to Beverly, Mass., and taught the town-school there about a year and a half; and boarded at the house of the Hon. Nathan Dane, the founder of the law-school at Harvard. After leaving Beverly, he taught a private school for young ladies, in Salem, until October, 1783; at which time he was elected a tutor in Harvard College, where he continued his labors as such until after the commencement of 1787. He then resigned his place as tutor, and entered upon the study of medicine with Dr. Edward Augustus Holyoke of Salem till October, 1788; when he gave up the idea of following medicine as a profession, and opened an apothecary store in Salem. He built and occupied the mansion-house, on Essex Street, late taken down, — where the Plummer Institute now stands.

In October, 1790, he was married to Miss Elizabeth Jeffry, daughter of William Jeffry, Esq., Clerk of the Court of the County of Essex, and grand-daughter of Joseph Bowditch, Esq. Aug. 24, 1791, he was elected a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences. April 4, 1795, he removed on to his farm in Danvers, and erected a permanent structure across Waters's River, which served for a dam and bridge; and built the splendid mansion-house known at the present time as the Capt. Porter Estate. In October, 1800, he was appointed a member of Congress from Essex South District to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Judge Sewall, the late member from that district. Nov. 5, 1800, he was also elected a member, from that district, of the succeeding Congress, for two years from and after the 4th of March, 1801; and was a member during the contest in the House between Thomas Jefferson and Aaron Burr, in which the former became the successful candidate, and succeeded to the office of President. Feb. 10, 1802, while a resident of Danvers, he was appointed by Gov. Strong a special Justice of the Court of Common Pleas for the County of Essex. In 1796, he and his associates built, and put in operation, the Salem Iron Factory for the manufacture of chain-cables, anchors, and other materials of iron for ship-building, for which he acted as the agent of the company: and the next year (1797) he invented, and put in operation in the above factory, and designed for its own special use, for the manufacture of nails and spikes with greater facility and at less cost, a nail machine, which cut and headed nails and spikes at one operation; and for which he afterwards received a patent, — it being the same machine now used for such purposes. He also invented about that time many useful and important agricultural implements, for which he took no patent. In November, 1807, he removed from Salem to Belfast, Hancock County, Me.; and for many years presided as Chief-Justice of the Court of Common Pleas in said county. May 21, 1815, he was elected an honorary member of the Linnæan Society of New England.

After removing to Belfast, he gave most of his time to agricultural pursuits; which he regarded, to use his own language, “as the most natural, healthy, and honorable occupation of man.” On his removal there, he purchased a large farm containing some four hundred acres, beautifully situated near the head of Belfast Bay, just south of the present business part of the city, and fronting about half a mile on the bay. His residence overlooked the charming scenery of the bay, studded with its numerous islands, and marked by its picturesque outline, — always presenting a view congenial to his taste and pleasing to his eye. Here he spent the remainder of his long and useful life; ever taking a deep interest in all matters of a public character designed to benefit and improve the country, particularly his own town and people. When the railroad from Quebec to the Atlantic coast, in Maine, was projected, he labored earnestly to make Belfast the place of its terminus; which, had such a purpose been effected, would, ere this, have made it a large commercial city. The cause of religion and education was esteemed by him as the cause that involved his highest duties, and his exertions and support were constantly applied in their behalf. At an early day, when the town was comparatively new, he was instrumental in establishing a high-school there, that the youth of the place might be educated at home; the beneficial effects of which have for a long time, and will for a long time to come, no doubt, be felt and appreciated.

He died at his residence in Belfast, Jan. 20, 1849, in the ninetieth year of his age. He possessed a strong constitution, as well as a strong and highly cultivated mind. His aim was high, and he soared above the sordid interests of the world. He was temperate, yet persevering; ardent in his emotions, yet possessing a kind heart and the best of qualities. With a fine form, a gentlemanly deportment, and a highly intellectual countenance, his presence was always commanding, and his conversation appropriate and instructive. His mental and physical powers remained with him, with remarkable uniformity and firmness, until within a few days of his death; which was caused by a lung-fever, produced by exposure to extreme cold, which he seldom sought to avoid. He was the last surviving member of his college-class; and, with two exceptions (Judge Farrar and James Lowell), the oldest living graduate of Harvard University.

He was the first who ever made a successful application of steam-power to the purposes of navigation; and the first to invent and construct a locomotive-engine, alias steam-carriage. The arts and sciences were his favorite study, and his inclinations constantly led him to be experimenting therein. As early as 1788, while a resident of Salem, he became especially interested in the purpose of applying steam-power to the practical use of propelling boats and land-carriages. He had the ability to comprehend the results that would follow the attainment of such a purpose; and at that time looked forward to the accomplishment of so important a work, then universally acknowledged as a desideratum in the mechanic arts. The idea as to boats was not new; various experiments had been tried, and different modes for propelling them attempted: but by what appliances, and how the thing could be done, remained, as yet, a mystery to the world.

John Fitch, a native of Windsor, Conn., and James Ramsey, a native of Maryland, were the first in America who made the attempt to propel boats by steam. Fitch was the first to commence building his boat; but Ramsey was the first to try his experiment. He had settled in Virginia, at Shepherdstown, Jefferson County, on the south bank of the Potomac; where, it is said, his log dwelling still stands. His first effort was the application of steam-power to a pump; by which he sought to propel his boat by drawing water in at the bow, and pouring it out at the stern. This proved inadequate for loaded boats, or for river navigation (which was then only thought of) against the current. He then attempted to apply his steam-power to setting-poles, but without success; and he made no further trial. He commenced the building of his boat, near his residence in Shepherdstown, in 1783; and launched it upon the Potomac in 1786, where the above experiments were tried. He afterwards (about 1788) went to England to prosecute his steam projects there; and while about to enter upon a public exposition of his views and plans before a crowded audience at Liverpool, as he rose to commence his lecture, he was struck down with an apoplectic fit, which terminated his life, and left his favorite project unattained.*

Fitch attempted to apply steam-power to oars. He commenced the building of his boat the same year, but earlier than Ramsey; but did not complete it, so as to try his experiment, until 1787. He launched his boat and made his trial upon the Delaware: but his machinery proved insufficient, and ill adapted to the purposes of navigation; and this, being his first, was also his last experiment. He made no other attempt, but had great faith in the ultimate success of steam for propelling boats. He died at Bardstown, in Kentucky, in 1796; and, at his death, made the request, that he should be buried on the banks of the Ohio, "that he might repose where the song of the boatman would enliven the stillness of his resting-place, and the music of the steam-engine soothe his spirit."

Mr. Read, in the mean time, having noticed the failure of these experiments of Ramsey and Fitch, and believing that they were occasioned by the ill-constructed machinery which they had tried, set himself to work to accomplish the end which they had sought and abandoned, by the invention and use of machinery of a different and more perfect character, such as would be better adapted to the object in view. He believed that their boilers for generating steam were poorly contrived, and that a substitute might be got up of far greater efficiency; that their long, awkward oars, and still more awkward pumps and setting-poles, condemned themselves, as unsuited to the purpose for which they were designed; and that some better mode might be adopted. Accordingly, in 1789, eighteen years before Fulton appeared with his experiments upon the Hudson, he had succeeded in inventing and constructing a boiler, differing essentially from those used by Fitch and Rumsey; and which, from its characteristic principles, he denominated a "portable furnace boiler." It occupied but little space, was light and strong, and so constructed as to require no other furnace than what itself constituted; and was designed both for steamboats and steam-carriages. In the mean time, he had constructed a model of a steam-carriage, with one of his newly invented boilers, and other new and suitable machinery attached, to give it locomotion; and, meanwhile, he had also constructed a steamboat, with his boiler and one of Watt's double-acting rotary engines attached. The boat was of sufficient size to carry a man, with the necessary apparatus for propelling it through the water. To the axis, which extended across the gunwale of the boat, were fixed two paddle-wheels, constructed precisely on the same principles they now are for steamboats, and such as are, at this day, almost universally adopted and used for steam-navigation throughout the world. With this boat, by means of a crank, and without a fly-wheel, he was safely propelled (immediately after its completion) with great rapidity, by the force of its little engine alone, across an arm of the sea which separates Danvers from Beverly. The Rev. Dr. Prince of Salem and several other gentlemen were present, and saw the experiment.

This was the first steamboat, and the first voyage ever taken in a steamer, constructed upon the same plan and principles of our present boats. The experiment was triumphant; the work, to human reason, was accomplished and proved; the long-sought desideratum had been reached. The emotions of the inventor, as he sat upon the deck of his little steamer and watched the seemingly intelligent workings of its engine and revolving wheels, but more especially as they faithfully shot him along the surface of the deep waters of the bay and safely landed him upon the shore beyond, can be better felt than described. Seeing as he saw, and feeling as he felt, when the evident success of his experiments, with the great results they told, flashed upon his mind, and were thus suddenly and successfully demonstrated, he could well realize the sensations of Franklin when he applied his knuckle to the key, and drew forth the electric spark. Surely he felt that he had not labored in vain.

By this experiment, he knew that he had reduced the power of steam to the easy control of man and to practical purposes, that promised untold results upon the industrial, commercial, and social interests of mankind; and, although the success of his improvements to him appeared certain, he was not aware that he had yet to encounter the blighting influence of an incredulous and selfish world, nor that he had yet to meet the derision of the ignorant (for whose common benefit he had so ardently labored) "as a weak and silly projector." Indeed, he was not aware that truth demonstrated could be crushed, nevertheless, under the weight of popular ignorance and prejudice. Accordingly, with high hopes, and bright prospects in anticipation, he applied, Feb. 8, 1790, to the Congress of the United States, then in session in the city of New York, for a patent of his inventions and improvements. He spent most of the winter of 1790 in New York, and exhibited drawings and descriptions of his boat, and also of his steam-carriage, to President Washington (to whom he had letters of introduction from Gen. Benjamin Lincoln), and also to the members of Congress and other gentlemen there,—among whom were many distinguished mechanics,—and explained to them the principles of his machinery, and especially of the operation of his paddle-wheels for boats, and of his boilers both for boats and land-carriages. While in New York, he boarded at Mrs. Wheaton's, in company with Dr. Cutler and Gen. Rufus Putnam, who were attending upon Congress, on business as agents of the Ohio Land Company. They introduced Gen. Stevens to him: and he then explained to Stevens the principles on which his boat was constructed,—combining the tubular boiler, which he had invented, with paddle-wheels and the double-acting rotary engine of Watt,—and made to him a full exhibition of his drawings and descriptions thereof; who critically examined the same.

The Congress of 1789 and '90, being the first after the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, was, as yet, but imperfectly organized. It was, moreover, overwhelmed with business of the most exciting and important character, and had but little time or thought to bestow on applications of a private nature. In the mean time, no patent-laws or regulations had ever been established or patent granted by the government. He presented his petition for a patent to the Board of Commissioners, and first asked for a patent for a steamboat with paddle-wheels, and for his portable furnace boiler for boats and land-carriages. But, unfortunately for the petitioner, in looking over some of the first volumes of the Transactions of the Royal Society, published upwards of sixty years before, he immediately noticed that some experiments had been made in Europe, which before that time had never come to his knowledge, with a view to ascertain the comparative utility of wheels and oars; and, erroneously supposing that he should not be entitled to a patent for a boat with paddle-wheels, he withdrew so much of his patent as related to said wheels, and substituted therefor a rowing machine, which he had invented and constructed upon the principle of the chain-pump, and which he believed would insure the next best purpose to paddle-wheels. This change he reluctantly made; and had he been sensible, at the time, of the crude and imperfect character of those experiments, and of the great dissimilarity in the machinery and combinations used, he most surely would have made no alteration, but have taken his patent as he at first petitioned. But, under the circumstances and impressions above named, he took a patent on his amended petition; for his rowing-machine for propelling boats, in lieu of paddle-wheels; and for his portable furnace boiler, designed for boats and land-carriages. The boiler contained no other furnace than what itself constituted; and was constructed internally with tubes, on the same principle, and nearly of the same form, with those now in use for locomotive-engines. He was, nevertheless, entitled to a patent on his petition as at first presented. His combinations and much of his machinery were new and original; his experiments had demonstrated their concordant action and success; and nothing had before transpired in the history of steam-power to produce such results, and to have interfered with his original application and purpose. This may be clearly seen by comparing his boat and experiments with those of an earlier date.

The Marquis of Worcester, the first noticeable experimenter in steam-power, had expressed his belief that it might be used for propelling vessels, but had never tried the experiment: this was about 1655. Next Savary, an Englishman, who is supposed to be the first that applied steam-power to any practical purpose (that of raising water from the mines of Cornwall), proposed to pump water with his engine, and turn a large wheel in the middle of a vessel, with paddle-wheels acting on the outside; but it does not appear that he ever tried it. Soon after (about 1680), Prince Rupert is said to have made an attempt to navigate a boat by steam on the Thames, and that he tried wheels without success; but little is known of his experiment, which was near a century before Watt's invention of a continuous rotary motion, which alone could make wheels practicable for such a purpose. Bornouville, in 1753, — seventy-three years after Prince Rupert's experiment, — gained a prize, offered by the French Academy of Sciences, for writing an essay; wherein he satisfactorily demonstrated the principle, that the attainment of a rotary motion by the steam-engine could alone render wheels practicable for propelling boats. This was thirty years or more before Watt, the great improver of the steam-engine, succeeded in obtaining this motion, and of satisfactorily perfecting his machinery therefor; which was not until 1784. The inference may be drawn as quite certain, that all attempts to propel boats by paddle-wheels must have proved ineffectual, and without the means of success, before Watt completed his invention. Indeed, we see, that after the essay of Bornouville, and before such invention, the idea of using wheels was, for the most part, abandoned. We find several attempts in France and this country, in the mean time, to propel boats by other means; the most prominent of which seemed to be a paddle in the form of a duck's foot, opening in its backward and closing in its forward motion through the water. This, Monsieur Genevois felt quite sure would work; but all of these experiments proved a failure. The co-incidence is worthy of note, that the Marquis de Jouffroy upon the Soane, and John Fitch upon the Delaware, in 1783, — the year before Watt came out with his perfected double-acting rotary engine, — were simultaneously engaged in trying to apply steam-power to oars.

Miller, of Dalswinton in Scotland, about this time, succeeded better. He first tried a triple boat (three boats side by side), and used wheels turned by men working at a crank; but, finding this too slow and laborious a matter, he employed one Symington to put a steam-engine into a larger vessel, built double. The wheels and machinery kept constantly breaking; the boat was in danger of sinking; the apparatus was taken out, and laid up; and there ended the experiment. Miller found fault with his engineer, and pronounced the whole a failure; but it is said that they succeeded in driving the boat along the Forth of Clyde Canal at the rate of seven miles an hour. Miller, Jouffroy, Fitch, and Ramsey were the last to carry out a long series of vague and abortive experiments; all of which experiments, up to theirs, inclusive, whether of wheels, oars or poles, duck's-feet or pumps, had proved unsuccessful, and been abandoned.

It was now that the subject of this notice, from the strength of his own genius alone, and without any definite knowledge of these isolated and vague experiments in Europe, combined the boiler he had constructed and the double-acting rotary engine of Watt with paddle-wheels, — being the first time that such a combination was ever effected. It is proper here to remark, that Watt himself never attempted to apply steam-power to the purposes of navigation. The above combination brought together in harmony with each other the necessary and essential parts of a steamboat, practical, complete, and perfect in its machinery and arrangement ready to do the great work of steam-navigation successfully, and just such a boat as we can now see by the thousand engaged in the internal and ocean navigation of the world. Such were the parts combined (prerequisites for all steam-navigation), if in miniature, yet in proper form and adaptation of the little boat which he constructed at Salem, and launched at Danvers; the drawings and representations of which he had exhibited in the city of New York, to Gen. Stevens and others, in 1790; and which, in truth, was the model and prototype that disclosed to the world a new and sublime agency for its use and progress, and which, in the mean time, introduced a new era in the history of navigation, commerce, and trade.

In 1791, — the very next year, it will be noticed, after the above exhibition in the city of New York, — Gen. Stevens, who was a man of enterprise and great wealth, commenced his projects in steam-navigation. Mr. Renwick, in his treatise on the steam-engine (p. 283), says that “Stevens invented the first tubular boiler during his experiments,* and that his first attempts were made with a rotary engine; for which, however, he speedily substituted one of Watt’s.” And on p. 284 he says, “Their apparatus was a system of paddles resembling a horizontal chain-pump (the rowing machine patented as above), and set in motion by an engine of Watt’s construction.” Now, it would be pleasant to know how far the above tubular boiler, Watt’s rotary engine, and system of paddles resembling a horizontal chain-pump, differed in their construction from the plans and drawings of the very same things which the subject of this notice had exhibited and explained to Mr. Stevens the year before he began his experiments. The patent having been taken out for a boat with the rowing-machine attached in lieu of paddle-wheels, it would be quite natural for Mr. Stevens to suppose that it was deemed by the patentee as the preferable mode of propelling boats, and that he had best construct a boat with an apparatus approximating thereto; but it will be seen that he and his associate, Chancellor Livingston, afterwards adopted the paddle-wheels as the preferable mode.

Chancellor Livingston, in 1797, commenced his steam projects upon the Hudson, and obtained an Act of the Legislature of New York for the exclusive navigation of that river. He and Stevens and Nicholas Rosevelt afterwards entered into copartnership, and united their efforts and means in prosecuting their steamboat experiments,—all of them, says Renwick, having the utmost confidence of success; adding, “We now know that such a plan (the system of paddles, and chain-pump apparatus), if inferior to paddle-wheels, might answer the purpose.” But, in 1801, Livingston was sent minister to France, and his copartnership with Stevens and Rosevelt terminated.

It was at Paris that Livingston first became acquainted with Robert Fulton, who had been engaged without success, from 1796, under the patronage of the French Government, in the construction of submarine boats as instruments of destruction in war. In 1803, Fulton is found employed under the patronage and direction of Livingston,—this being his (Fulton’s) first attempt to construct a steamboat for navigation; and that same year he launched a small boat upon the Seine, with paddle-wheels attached, a tubular boiler, and the rotary engine of Watt. He succeeded in propelling his boat at the rate of four miles an hour; and came to the conclusion, says Renwick (p. 286), “that, of all methods hitherto proposed, the paddle-wheel possessed the greatest advantages.” Indeed, Fulton went through with a series of experiments, under the direction of Livingston, before he built the above boat, to determine the comparative advantages of paddle-wheels and the chain of paddles (alias rowing-machines); and thereupon concluded to apply the paddle-wheels as the preferable mode.

tion (viz., of tubular boilers, the double-acting rotary engine of Watt, and paddle-wheels), success was certain, Livingston and Fulton at once entered into an arrangement to construct a boat of large size upon the Hudson; and Livingston furnished Fulton with funds to carry out the enterprise. Fulton then went to the workshop of Watt (which had then become Watt and Bolton), in England, and there ordered his engine. In 1806, the engine reached the city of New York; and, in 1807, the celebrated "Clermont," dressed out with said double-acting rotary engine of Watt, tubular boilers, and paddle-wheels, with Fulton on board, skimmed her way along the Hudson, with triumphant success, to the city of Albany, with just such success, and substantially just such machinery, as had been applied to the little steamer, which, eighteen years before, had so gallantly borne its projector and builder across an estuary of the sea,—drawings of which, in 1790, had been exhibited and explained to Stevens, the after-partner of Livingston; who became the patron and director of Fulton, in his first experiment upon the Seine, in 1803.

And here the subject must be left for every candid person to determine for himself, whether Fulton or the subject of this notice was the first inventor and constructor of a steamboat having such a combination of machinery as is now in general use; and whether Stevens or he was the inventor of the tubular boiler which Fulton used, and which is still adopted. One need only refer to his patent, obtained sixty-seven years ago, to determine the above fact, and to show, in addition, that he was the first inventor and constructor of a steam-carriage, the principles of which are substantially and practically carried out by our present locomotives. It is claimed that "Evans was the first who entertained rational hopes of being able to move carriages by steam" (see Renwick, p. 297). The author must have been ignorant of the above patent, of the model of the steam-carriage constructed at Salem as preliminary thereto, and of the fact that the patent was obtained eleven years before Evans had made his first experiment at Philadelphia (which was not until 1801), or he would not have made the above assertion.

Prior to 1789, when the little steamer took her passage across the estuary at Danvers, steam-power had never been applied to any practical use, except for raising water and emptying sinks and mines. All attempts to apply it to the purposes of navigation had failed; and it does not appear that any attempt was made before that time, or the idea entertained, to apply it to land-carriages, alias locomotives. The subject was then new, and but little understood by the mass of mankind, to whom it appeared mysterious and visionary. This may be readily seen from the fact, that the members of Congress even were so ignorant and sceptical on the subject, that when the petition for the above-mentioned patent was read by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, as he came to that part of it which related to the application of steam to land-carriages, a general smile was excited among the members. The petitioner, who was present, was a man of such sensibility, that he could not endure an indication so trying to his own better knowledge and feelings. He felt the sting for many years, and felt it none the less that those who inflicted it were not conscious of the injury. They intended no harm or indignity; and surely they were not aware that they had trifled with human genius, and extinguished the energies of a man who had opened the way to national honor and wealth, and to the introduction of the greatest of modern improvements. But so it really was. The effect was paralyzing to him. He shrunk from the further prosecution of his plans until a more favorable public sentiment and opportunity should present. At a later and more favorable period, as has been seen, others, possessing the means, and consequently the power, took the benefit of his improvements, and won the fame that of right belonged to him.

He was too early in his steam projects. The world was incredulous, the country was poor, and business unsettled. Even the blood of the Revolution had scarcely ceased to smoke from the ground, and the vast expenditure of treasure in the contest still weighed heavily upon the people. The country, moreover, was distracted with a yet unstable government, and by numerous conflicting interests; and there was but a partial opportunity, and indeed but little occasion, for costly experiments and great practical results in the mechanic arts. These things, as well as the want of faith and courage in others, were in the way of his progress; and he did not, meanwhile, possess the ample fortune of a Stevens or a Livingston to carry out his inventions and plans. Hence he derived neither honor nor profit from the time and money he expended in his experiments: but he lived to see his inventions and improvements applied to practical use by other hands, and to feel the gratification, that the machinery which he for the first time used as the most eligible for propelling boats (and which he put together and proved while Fulton was employed as a journeyman painter in the studio of West, in London), has, since that time, been successfully adopted and used in every quarter of the globe; and still more gratified in seeing locomotive-engines, capable of moving at a speed of a mile in a minute, put in motion by steam generated in a boiler, and applied by other apparatus thereto attached, constructed essentially on the same principles with the steam-carriage he had invented more than fifty years before, and for which, in connection with his boat, he obtained a patent the first day that a patent was ever issued by the authority of the United States; but more gratified than in all else, that he lived to triumph over that smile of derision which the members of Congress exhibited at the idea of a locomotive-engine.

It is proper to add, that he lived and died an exemplary professor of the Harvard School, believing in a higher and more perfect state of existence hereafter, "and looking forward with an eye of faith to an exaltation which he believed was in store for him beyond this world."

CHAPTER VIII.

WILLIAM READE OF WEYMOUTH, AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

1. WILLIAM READE, supposed to be the son of William Reade and Lucy Henage, was born in 1605, and sailed from Gravesend, in the county of Kent, in the "Assurance de Lo" (Isaac Broomwell and George Persey, masters), in 1635. He settled in Weymouth, Mass; and was made freeman, Sept. 2, 1635. He bought a house and land of Zachary Bicknall, for seven pounds thirteen shillings and fourpence, in 1636; which was an average price for homesteads at that early day. Only one year before the date of William Reade's purchase, all the land in Boston Proper, with the exception of six acres in and about Charles and Beacon Streets, was sold by William Blackstone for thirty pounds. Previous to 1650, a dwelling-house in Boston, and lot of land, would not command a greater price than a good cow; while, in 1857, the average of the valuation of dwelling-houses was $5,500. Mr. Reade was among the early settlers of Weymouth,—it having been made a plantation, May 8, 1635; and Rev. Mr. Hall and twenty-one families settled there. He was representative from Weymouth in 1636 and '38. The Christian name of his wife, it is supposed, was Ivis. Their children were—William, born Oct. 15, 1639; Esther, May 8, 1641; Thomas; John, 1649; Mary, who married Thomas Dyer; Margaret, who married John Vining, May 11, 1757, and died May 6, 1659.

2. William, son of William and Ivis, was born at Weymouth, Oct. 16, 1639. He married Esther Thompson of Middleborough in 1675. It may be interesting to some of their descendants to know her parentage and history. It appears, by a genealogy published by Ignatius Thompson in 1841, that John Thompson, father of Esther, was six years old when he landed in Wesson's company; and, when he came of proper age, married Mary Cook, daughter of Francis Cook, who was one of the "May Flower's" company. He settled, and built a log house, thirteen miles west of Plymouth, on the confines of what was then called Plymouth, now Halifax and Middleborough. He lived there till his house was burned by the Indians. While living there, either he or his wife would walk to meeting every Sunday. The only place where they had an elder to speak to them was Plymouth,—a distance of more than thirteen miles. We have, says Thompson, orally received information, that, during one year of his residence there, his wife, on two of the sabbaths in June, after breakfast, took a child six months old in her arms, and walked to Plymouth, attended meeting, and returned home the same day. We have in this a picture of real life as it existed in those times, as well as a striking illustration of the indomitable energy and perseverance of the Puritan ancestors. The descendants of William and Esther may thus distinctly trace their ancestors through her to the Pilgrim company of the "May Flower," who landed on Plymouth Rock. The children of William and Esther were—William; John, born July 10, 1687; Jacob, Nov. 6, 1691; Bushnor, who married a Mr. Porter; Porter; Mercy, who married a Mr. Whitmarsh; Mary; Hester and Sarah, born March 21, 1694. This William was constable in Weymouth in 1675; which was, in those times, the principal officer of the town. He was selectman in 1680, an extensive dealer in land, and a representative to the General Court. His will was proved Sept. 12, 1706, and may be found in the Probate Office in Boston (lib. 16, fol. 73).

3. John, son of Thomas and Sarah, born Dec. 30, 1679; married Sarah. Children, — John; Sarah. His will is dated 1757; and he alludes in it to his estate in Abington, which he inherited of his deceased brother Samuel, who died June 25, 1750. He also speaks of his daughter Sarah.

He has probably been the author of more new inventions, and obtained more patents, than any other person in the United States; and is now, in the eighty-third year of his age, actively employed in a new and important invention. Among the long list of his useful inventions are the machines known as the "Odiorne tool," the "Reed tool," the machine now in almost universal use for making cut-nails, and machines for pulverizing dyewoods, for steering vessels, as well as various kinds of pumps, treenail machines, cotton-gins, &c. He is said to be a man of great industry and indomitable perseverance. Free and generous, he expends on new inventions the fruits of his previous toils. He has made and lost several fortunes in his day: but, although poor, has made many rich; and his name will be remembered by future generations with respect and gratitude. Though no towering monument should be raised to his memory, yet every nail driven in the building of our dwellings speaks forth the benefits of his wonderful ingenuity.

After the death of his wife Sarah, he married Widow Hannah Noyes. Their only child was — (7.) Betty, born in 1734. He appears to have been a man of influence, from the fact that he was elected to the office of Town Clerk of Abington nineteen years. He died in 1766, at the age of seventy-five years.

This William, son of Jacob and Sarah, was an earnestly religious man, and for many years a leader in the neighborhood religious meetings of his time. He died Dec. 4, 1807, aged eighty-two years : Silence, his wife, died March 9, 1807.

* During her maiden life, she was accustomed to say that there were three conditions with which she would not be connected in marriage ; viz., with a widower who had children, with a clergyman, or with her own cousin. But she seems to have changed her mind ; for, in marrying Rev. Solomon Reed, she married them all in one.

5. Rev. William Reed, second child of William and Silence, and grandson of Jacob and Sarah, was born in Abington, June 8, 1755. Being in early life religiously disposed, he desired a liberal education, with the purpose of entering the Christian ministry. He graduated at Harvard College in 1782; and in April, 1784, was ordained as pastor of the Congregational Church in Easton, Mass. In May, 1784, he married Olive Pool* (born Jan. 28, 1767), third daughter of Samuel Pool of Bridgewater. The children of Rev. William and Olive were — (1.) Mehetabel, born in Easton, June 20, 1785: she married Jacob Deane of Mansfield in 1808. (2.) William, born Dec. 12, 1787. (3.) David, born Feb. 6, 1790. (4.) Olive, born in April, 1792; died in August, 1793. (5.) Jason, born Oct. 14, 1794. (6.) Daniel, born March 22, 1797. (7.) Seth, born Aug. 22, 1799. (8.) Lyman, born Dec. 28, 1801. (9.) Lucius, born Oct. 27, 1805. Mr. Reed died Nov. 16, 1809; having been the pastor of the church in Easton upwards of twenty-five years. His ministry, though not distinguished by unusual instances of religious excitement, was a successful one, considering its limited duration. The number of church-members was much increased; and his labors were believed by disinterested observers to have had an important influence in effecting a decided reformation in the moral character of the town, whose reputation in the surrounding places had for some years been low. The staid and reliable character of the first settlers had not, with some honorable exceptions, been maintained by their descendants. Many of them had fallen into the vices then common to new settlements;* and the immoral tendencies had been aggravated by the disturbed and unprofitable character of the two preceding ministries,—one contentious, and the other immoral. There was a call for reform; and it was accomplished, as became manifest to all observers: so that, at Mr. Reed's decease (Nov. 16, 1809, at the age of fifty-four), the reputation of the town, as to the maintenance of order and exemplary morals, stood on a full equality with its neighbors. This reform, aided under Providence by the general progress of society, was brought about, not suddenly with religious excitement, but gradually and quietly; the natural result, so far as the minister's influence was concerned, of a faithful devotion to his duties as a preacher and pastor, enforcing all by his own steady and pure Christian example.†

* I find frequent marriage alliances to have been formed, and a quartering of arms, between the Reeds and Pools in the fourteenth century. The name was then Pole; and the alteration of the orthography is in keeping with the manner in which the etymology of words has been, in many cases, entirely lost. Pool is a corruption of De la Pole, Lord Chancellor under Richard II., and whose sister married a Reed; a large amount of property coming into the hands of the Reed Family by that marriage.

* At the time of Mr. Reed's settlement in Easton, in 1784, probably one-quarter, if not one-third, of the territory was covered by the original forest.

† The period at which Mr. Reed was settled was peculiarly unfavorable, as regards worldly support; and his experience not only shows the trials and privations of a country minister's life from seventy-five to fifty years ago, but reveals also—what only those who have felt it can fully understand, and what is as true now as then—the real destitution and distress to which his family is liable, when the scanty support of his small salary is cut off by death. This destitution and distress, in the present case, were experienced to the full extent by the death of Mr. Reed in November, 1809. His original salary (one hundred pounds) was very imperfectly paid for many years, owing to the depressed state of the whole business of the country just after the Revolutionary War: and, by the great changes in the prices of provisions and labor, it soon became much less valuable; so that, during the twenty-five years of his ministry, the average value of his salary was less than two-thirds of the cash value of a hundred pounds when he was settled. Under these circumstances, it was only with the most rigid economy and many privations that essential family expenses could be met. It is not difficult to understand that the situation of the widow was one of peculiar anxiety and trial, thus left without means, with her two oldest sons on their last year in college, and five younger sons to be supported and educated. By the blessing of Providence, she was carried through it, and, at the close of a long life, was able to say (Ps. xxxvii. 25), "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." She remained in widowhood amongst her husband's people upwards of forty years, beloved and respected for her peace-loving spirit, her gentleness and sweetness of temper, and her consistent and exemplary Christian life. She died on the 26th of March, 1850, at the age of eighty-three; and her eight surviving

Mr. Deane occupies the paternal estate of his ancestors, which has been thus occupied for several generations. The dwelling-house was built by one of them, in the early part of the eighteenth century.

He afterwards completed a course of study at the Divinity School, Cambridge; and preached for several years, but never took permanent charge of a parish. In middle life, he settled on the homestead of his father, at Easton; where for many years he held the commission and performed the duties of a justice of the peace.

He commenced preaching in 1814 ; and, from that time till 1821, had charge of different parishes, for considerably extended periods, in Maine, New Hampshire, and Connecticut, but was not ordained. The disturbed state of religious opinions in the parishes at that time, — at the breaking-out of the great controversy between the Liberal and Orthodox parties in the Congregational body, — and his experience of the privations to which a clergyman's family were liable from precarious and inadequate support, led him to decline a permanent parochial connection, till he should be able, without worldly anxiety or embarrassment, to devote himself fully to professional duty.

The opportunity which his mode of life gave him, in these years, of learning the state of religious sentiment and inquiry in various communities, and the growing interest generally manifested in the religious discussions of the time, induced him to propose the publication of a religious newspaper, as an advocate of Liberal Christian views: and, with the approbation of his clerical friends, — Rev. Dr. Channing, Rev. Dr. Ware, and others, — he commenced in Boston, in April, 1821, the publication of the "Christian Register," taking himself its editorial management; and he continues to this time (1860) its publisher and proprietor.

His wife died March 5, 1787. Tradition says that Mr. Reed was on a visit to Abington at the time of the death of his wife, and thought he had a presentiment that she was dead, by some remarkable appearance at the side of his bed in the night. He told his friends that his wife was dead ; and, as soon as it could be ascertained, it proved true. She was riding through a piece of woods, and a tree fell upon and killed her. He married, for second wife, Hannah Reed Bates of Abington, daughter of Ezekiel Reed of Abington, and widow of Samuel Bates, Jan. 9, 1788. He died at Cummington, May 10, 1808.

4. Rev. Solomon Reed, son of Capt. William of Abington and of Alice Nash, was born Oct. 22, 1719. He graduated at Harvard College in 1739. There is no record informing us under whose instructions he pursued his studies for the ministry; though it was probably with Rev. Mr. Brown, the minister of his native town. That he entered the profession from a conviction of duty, and with an earnest purpose to promote the religious well-being of his fellow-men, is very manifest from such of his manuscript writings as have come down to us, as well as from the direct tradition of those who knew him intimately.

During the few first years of Mr. Reed's ministry, and afterward as we have reason to suppose, he was very earnest and devoted in his labors for the spiritual good of others, both by religious conversation and preaching, as well in neighborhoods on week-days as in the regular ministrations of Sunday.

Among the precious antiquarian treasures in the archives of the Pilgrim Society in Plymouth are a few manuscript sermons of Mr. Reed, written in a fine, clear hand, in an easy, flowing style of composition, and indicating decided ability. With these documents, there is also an original * manuscript journal kept by him from Oct. 3, 1743, to Jan. 9, 1745. This journal indicates often a great tenderness of religious feeling; and often, too, a sadly morbid sensitiveness of conscience, evidently arising from the mingled influence of his uncheerful religious views, and a diseased physical constitution, of which he often speaks. The brief extracts, given in notes below, from the journal to which we have referred, help us to a fair estimate of a man somewhat noted in his day; and, at the same time, illustrate the style and tone of religious thought and feeling of that period.*

It was during the period when Mr. Whitefield was preaching in New England that Mr. Reed was keeping his journal, and was so self-scrutinizing as to his spiritual state. The following passages from the journal, relating to Mr. Whitefield, cannot fail to be read with interest:—

* "Jan. 9, 1744. — O Lord! thou art my God; and thy loving-kindness and faithfulness towards me, on looking of me up and redeeming me from my sinful backslidings (notwithstanding all my negligence in seeking of thee), calls not only for my thankfulness, but strong engagements of soul for thyself. And now, O God! I solemnly renew the covenant I have entered into with thee; and I am resolved, by divine grace, to be more careful to keep my covenant with thee than I have ever yet been. I am resolved never to live one day carelessly, without thee, as I have done; but, if I should lose thy comfortable presence, I am resolved, as thou shalt enable me, to make it my business carefully to seek thee until I shall find thee again."

"Oct. 27, 1744. — I was guilty in the morning of speaking a word too lightly about Satan and his temptations, or the like; and I had a very heavy charge lying against my soul, after this, most all the day: but, in the evening, my weary, sinking, discouraged soul was comfortably supported and refreshed with a sense of God's mercy and goodness."

"Tuesday, Dec. 18, 1744. — I think I felt something of religion in the morning; but I grew dull and careless, accused by conscience, and exceedingly sunk down into discouragements, in the afternoon."

"Wednesday, Dec. 19, 1744. — I was exceedingly barren and lean, and I was very much sunk down under a sense of my guilt and vileness."

"Monday, Jan. 7, 1745. — I had some accusations of conscience in the morning, but not totally beaten down."

"Wednesday, Jan. 9, 1745. — I felt something of a sweet religious frame of spirit."

“Abington, Sunday, Dec. 23, 1744. — Heard Mr. Brown in the afternoon. Monday, I travelled to Duxbury, and heard Mr. Whitefield preach in the evening; and then I travelled with him, and heard him every day, all the week. Sunday, Dec. 30, preached at Titicut; and we had some token of the divine presenee. I heard Mr. Whitefield again on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, at Bridgewater, Easton, and Taunton. N.B. — Mr. Whitefield is exceedingly filled with the spirit of Jesus, and not ashamed of Christ, his cause or children; and a wonderful power attended his administrations. The assemblies seemed much quickened, melted down; and sometimes many were overpowered with a sense of divine things, and crying out. N.B. — Sometimes, since I have been with Mr. Whitefield, I have felt guilty, low, and dull; sometimes I have been sweetly revived and refreshed.”

In 1746, Mr. Reed was ordained as minister of the Second Congregational Church in Framingham. In 1748, he was married to Abigail Stoughton of Connecticut. He remained in Framingham till 1756; when he dissolved his connection with that church, and was installed as minister of Titicut, a parish embracing the north-western border of Middleborough and the south-west part of Bridgewater.

His children were — Sarah, born in 1750; John, Nov. 11, 1751; Solomon, in 1752; Samuel, in 1754; and Timothy, in 1756. Notwithstanding the limited support given to clergymen in those days, Mr. Reed gave to each of his four sons a collegiate education. After the death of his first wife, he married his cousin Sarah Reed, daughter of Jacob, his father's younger brother. His health, never firm, sensibly declined in 1784; and he died in the spring of 1785, at a little past the age of sixty-five.

We have been permitted to copy the following interesting notice of his funeral. It is from a coarse half-sheet of manuscript, broken and yellow with age, but clearly written in a homely hand. It had been carefully kept, probably, from near that time to the present, in an old Bible of his cousin William, son of Jacob, which recently came into the hands of a grandson.

“Died at his house in Titicut Parish, with a lingering illness, on the 7th instant (month not named), the Rev. Solomon Reed, pastor of a church in Middleborough; and was interred on the 10th: aged sixty-five. The interment was attended by a numerous concourse, in procession, to the meeting-house; where a prayer was made, and a sermon suited to the occasion, from Isa. xxxiii. 20, was delivered by the Rev. Mr. Shaw of Bridgewater. The whole was concluded by a pertinent and pathetic prayer by the Rev. Mr. Porter; while an effusion of tears marked the affliction of the church and people, and testified the respect they bore his memory. The character of Mr. Reed as a disciple of Jesus Christ, and a luminary in the candlestick in which Providence had placed him, was respectable. The advancement of Christ’s kingdom in the hearts of his flock, and among mankind in general, was a subject in which he was much engaged. He was a workman that needed not to be ashamed; for he rightly divided the word of truth, and gave to every one his portion in due season.

“The doctrine of the gospel, which he fervently inculcated in public, and the friendly, pious counsel which he imparted in private, were proved and enforced by his life and conversation.

“He lived to behold and regret true religion perverted, on the one hand, into metaphysical disquisition and vain jangling; and, on the other, reduced to a level with natural endeavors and human exertions. That experimental religion which purifies the heart and overcomes the world was the object which he strove to promote. Its amiable effects were exemplified in his life: its peculiar consolations were powerful in his death. His natural and his spiritual children, the people of his charge, and all that knew him, rise up and call him blessed. May we die his death! and may our last end be like his!”

5. Rev. John, son of Solomon, was born in Framingham, Nov. 11, 1751; graduated at Yale College in 1772. He prepared for the ministry under the instruction of his father, in Titicut; and, after the declaration of American Independence, was for some time chaplain in the United-States Navy. On the 7th of January, 1780, he was ordained as pastor of the Congregational Church and Society in West Bridgewater; being only the third minister of that ancient parish. In the same year, he married Hannah Sampson of Middleborough. His children were — John, born Sept. 2, 1781; Daniel, Aug. 29, 1783; Hannah, Dec. 15, 1785, died Feb. 20, 1786; Solomon, born March 22, 1788; Hannah, July 7, 1790; Sally, March 21, 1793, died April 27, 1797; Caleb, born April 22, 1797; and Sampson, June 10, 1800. His wife died in 1815; and, in 1822, he married Mrs. Phœbe Paddock, sister of his first wife.

Mr. Reed was a man of remarkably clear and discriminating intellect; was known and acknowledged by the strong minds of his time as a master of logic, — of the great art of thinking and reasoning correctly. In the earnest theological discussions between the Hopkinsians and the Arminians at the large clerical gatherings of fifty years ago, he always stood forward as the champion of the Liberal doctrine. By his ready exposure of sophistry, and his clear and forcible statements, the success of his argument was generally triumphant and crushing.

Soon after the adoption of the Federal Constitution, the almost unanimous sentiment of his Congressional district pointed to him as eminently qualified, by his ardent patriotism, his sound judgment, and his readiness and power in debate, for the office of representative in Congress; and, in 1794, he was elected to fill the office, which he held for six years, through three successive Congressional terms; at the close of which time, he declined a re-election. In 1803, he received the degree of Doctor in Divinity from Brown University. Several of his occasional discourses were published; and, about the year 1805, he published a duodecimo volume on the subject of Infant Baptism.

In his intercourse with men, Mr. Reed's manner, notwithstanding his high intellectual claims, was always marked by great modesty, and evident humility of spirit. His public discourses, always clear and convincing, were more noticeable, perhaps, for strength than for pathos. In his devotional performances, his manner was most devout and reverential, and indicated unusual absorption of mind. He had the entire confidence and respect of his people, and performed among them, with great discretion and faithfulness, the duties of the Christian ministry for upwards of fifty years. Near the close of life, he became entirely blind; but continued still to preach, and to perform other duties of his profession. He died Feb. 17, 1831, in his eightieth year. It is much to be regretted that there is no print of his remarkably fine head.

6. John, son of Rev. Dr. John and Hannah Sampson, born Sept. 2, 1781; graduated at Brown University in 1803. The first two or three years after leaving college he devoted to teaching, first as preceptor of Plymouth Academy, Bridgewater; and then as tutor in Brown University. He chose the profession of law, and pursued his preparatory studies with the Hon. William Baylies, an eminent attorney of his native town. In 18—, he married Olive Alger, daughter of Abiezer Alger, Esq., of West Bridgewater. He commenced the practice of law at Yarmouth, on Cape Cod. He soon attained eminence in his profession, and was elected a representative in Congress. This office he filled for twenty-eight years. By the impartiality of his course on all important questions, he early obtained in Congress the confidence of members of both Houses. His statements of facts and statistics relating to any subject of debate were always listened to as reliable and true. He thus exerted, after the first years of his service, an important influence, especially in the settlement of all questions involving the interests of his district and his State. There were instances, indeed, particularly in the discussion of questions relating to the fisheries, when, by a single speech, he completely revolutionized the sentiment of the House, and changed the vote from a lean minority to a triumphant majority. In 1844, he was elected Lieutenant-Governor; and was re-elected to the office each year during the administration of Gov. Briggs. In 1845, he received the degree of LL.D. from Brown University. He then removed to Boston. In July, 1838, he married Mary E. Minot, who died in 1842. They had two children, — Helen; Arthur. In November, 1847, he married Ruth Cobb. He died in Boston, Oct. 14, 1854. The following more complete account of his life and character is selected from an obituary notice published in the "New-Jerusalem Magazine" of November, 1854:—

"He entered Harvard College in 1813, and was graduated in 1817. After teaching school in Medford one year, he entered the office of his brother, the Hon. John Reed (recently Lieutenant-Governor of this State), and there pursued the study of the law for three years. He was then admitted to the bar, and practised his profession in Yarmouth, where he resided until 1827; when he removed to Boston for the purpose of entering into the firm of Cyrus Alger and Company, which was afterwards incorporated as the South-Boston Iron Company, and is widely known as one of the principal iron-founding establishments in the United States. He remained connected with this company until his death, which was caused by an attack of dysentery, with fever; and took place on Saturday, the 14th of October, 1854. During this fatal illness, he was cheerful and childlike; not resigned (for this implies the subdual or suppression of some unwillingness); and, to use his own expression, 'he had no choice,' but was glad to leave the issues of life and death in the hands of his Father.

"He received the doctrines of the New Jerusalem while studying law ; being one of a circle of young men, of about the same age, who were in college together, and received these doctrines at nearly the same time, and have ever since lived near to each other in a companionship, from which the late Mr. Hobart, and now Mr. Reed, are all that have been called away. The wish to be with the society of the church in Boston was one of the motives which led him to remove to this city. He assumed at once the position which belonged to his character, and has ever held it ; through all these years, aiding materially in promoting every good work, and in averting from us much evil.

“ In 1832, Mr. Reed took charge of the Magazine, and has ever since been its editor. Of the manner in which he has conducted this work, we need not speak to the readers of it. One thing, however we cannot forbear from saying : during this long period, he has sustained the Magazine, sometimes with but little of the aid which might have been rendered, always while pressed by the urgent cares and duties of a very extensive business, and always without pecuniary profit or compensation.

“ The funeral services took place in the afternoon of Tuesday, the 17th of October, in the New-Jerusalem Church in Boston, and were attended by a large assemblage.

“ As most of those for whom we are writing this notice have long known Mr. Reed in his relation to the church, it would seem unnecessary that we should do more than allude to his eminent utility there. The offices he has borne, and the habit of the General Convention, during the whole term of his connection with it, to put him in those places which demanded especial ability and inclination for the discharge of important duties, constitute the best evidence on this point.

“ Of his character we must speak, although it will not be expected that we should enlarge upon this topic. Suffice it then to say, that its prominent and governing elements were exceeding kindness and benevolence, integrity, deliberate caution, sound judgment, a steadfast and undisturbed look at the precise use to be accomplished, and the most inflexible adherence to the principles which he thought should govern the question before him. Perhaps it was this sincerity and singleness of purpose, and the quiet firmness that avoided all violence or unnecessary conflict, but was never to be shaken, which, more than any thing else, explain his influence and his utility. This firmness was adherence to principle, and not to mere opinion; an important distinction, which few persons make. Always conciliatory in manner, he listened, not in silence only, but in good faith, to whatever was said; and impressed those who conversed with him with a conviction, that he was able and disposed to do them full justice: and he easily, for sufficient reason, modified or relinquished an opinion. But his principles were unassailable, and he saw them clearly.

“ He has gone from among us. Externally, we shall see him no more, and hear him no more; but it is our hope and our belief, that we shall still feel his influence, and be the better for it. From the new home to which he has gone, he may help us more than ever; for the doctrines which he loved so well permit us to think of him as trained by the life of uses which he led here and its varied discipline, and by the devoting so large a part of his time, his thought, and his affection, to the good of the church on earth, to enter upon corresponding uses, but with far wider scope and far ampler means of active usefulness, in the church in heaven.”

6. Sampson, son of Rev. Dr. John, born June 10, 1800; graduated at Harvard University in 1818, where he held a high rank as a scholar. After graduating, he remained at the university about two years as a theological student; but he finally removed to Boston, and adopted the profession of a merchant,— a profession for which his honorable practice and example have uniformly tended to command respect. In Dec. 25, 1832, he married Catherine, daughter of John Clark, Esq., of Waltham. His children are — James, born June 8, 1834; Thomas, Feb. 3, 1837; Elizabeth, July 10, 1838; Joseph Sampson, Dec. 13, 1841. Having early embraced the doctrines of the New Church, he has been one of the principal supporters of the society of this order in Boston, and of the General Convention of the New Church in America. His devotion to the interests of this church for a period of forty years has justly secured to him the confidence and respect of its members throughout the country. His literary tastes have led him to devote much time to books, and particularly to theological inquiries and studies. Besides his contributions to periodical literature, he has had the sole charge of the "New-Church Magazine for Children" from its commencement in 1844; and also, since the death of his brother Caleb, a prominent part in the management of the "New-Jerusalem Magazine." In 1826, he published a small work, entitled "Observations on the Growth of the Mind," which has attracted much attention, and passed through five editions in this country, and one or more in England.

Unassuming in manners, and of a retiring disposition, he has never sought place or influence in public affairs; though he has served two or three years in the office of alderman. The duties of this situation, as also those of membership of the public-school committee, of bank direction, and of various trusts, public and private, he has discharged in a manner to insure the general respect of his fellow-citizens.

After leaving college, he taught one year in the public Latin School in Boston, and then devoted his attention to theological studies; and in April, 1860, was ordained as a minister of the New-Jerusalem Church, and installed as assistant pastor of the Boston Society. He will be remembered, by the members of the Reed Family who were present at the celebration of the two hundredth anniversary of the settlement of Bridgewater, as the gentleman who delivered the poem on that occasion.

* Mr. Reed is represented as a man of large frame and great physical power. His boldness and determination of character are illustrated by an incident in the time of Shay's Rebellion, the account of which comes to us from a reliable source. It is related that a party of Shay's troops came to the house of Mr. Reed during a bad snow-storm, one Sunday morning; turned Mr. Reed's cattle out of his barn, and put their horses in; and, at the same time, took possession of his house, putting their camp-kettles in the several fire-places, and having things in their own way. So great was the confusion, that the sabbath services were entirely interrupted; and when he had time to collect himself, and determine his course of action, he went to the barn, turned the horses out, and put his own cattle back in their place; and, in the house, he passed from room to room, manifesting such resolute determination, that the troops were awed, and restrained from any violence. The result was, that the report of the near approach of Gov. Bowdoin's troops induced the Shays party to decamp in such haste as to leave several camp-kettles behind them, and gave an opportunity of an uninterrupted afternoon service.

his age, and thirty-third of his ministry. He was a man of sound sense, a devoted Christian, and much beloved by his people, and by the community generally. After his death, his bereaved flock erected a monument to his memory. It is a marble tablet, supported by four pillars over his grave, with the following inscription:—

REV. SAMUEL REED,
SECOND MINISTER IN WARWICK,
Died 31st July, 1812; æt. 57.

He had strong powers of mind; was bold in defence of the truth; severe against wickedness; mild towards the humble; pitiful to the distressed; affectionate towards his friends.

Frank and sincere in all his professions; rational and fervent in his piety; faithful in his pastoral duties.

He taught the Christian doctrine in its simplicity and truth; he maintained the freedom of the human mind, the unchangeable obligations of moral duty, the impartial justice of God, and future retribution.

Under the vital impression of this faith, he felt and communicated the cheering entertainments of life, and enjoyed the richest solace and triumph in death.

Ezekiel, Sept. 16, 1772; Zebulon, 1774; Hannah, 1776; Olive, 1777; Jesse, 1778; Charles; Abraham; Briggs Rogers, May 2, 1784. The following, from Hayward's "Gazetteer of Massachusetts," will do justice to the memory of Mr. Ezekiel Reed better than I can by any effort of my own:—

"The making of tacks by hand commenced very early in Abington. The first attempt was to cut up old iron hoops into points by a very imperfect kind of shears, and take them up one by one and place them in a common vice, and screw up and unscrew for the purpose of heading each tack with a hammer. From this process they were called cut tacks: but the mode of making by hand was much improved by movable dies placed in an iron frame, in the shape of an ox-bow; the two ends, in which were placed the dies, being brought together by a lever pressed by the foot. In the first process, a man might make one thousand tacks per day; in the latter, eight thousand. This was a great improvement; and the inventor, Mr. Ezekiel Reed, was entitled to a patent. He made some attempts to conceal the operation; but it was so simple, and so easily applied, that others soon got it, and it came into general use. With machines, or tack-tools as they were called, thus improved, from three to four hundred men and boys were employed in making tacks in the town of Abington and vicinity."

The Taunton branch of Reeds are in the habit of having a yearly meeting. The following, taken from a newspaper, will describe one of these gatherings: —

“REED FAMILY GATHERING. — The annual gathering of the Reed Family was held in the orchard of the old homestead in Taunton. The oration was by John R. Hodges of Fall River; the poem, by Mrs. B. W. Williams of Boston; the report of remarkable events, by Samuel G. Tucker of Taunton; report of Special Committee on the same subject, by Mrs. Sophia J. Reed of Taunton. The original hymns were by Mrs. Sophronia Hodges of Fall River, and Mrs. Eleanor Dean of Taunton. The oldest living member of the family, John Reed of Taunton, presided. He is about eighty-three years of age, is still in active business, and has more of vigor and energy than many of the younger members. The morning was devoted to the regular exercises, including the annual business; after which the whole company sat down, under a large tent prepared in the orchard for the occasion, to a sumptuous dinner. Songs and toasts were the order after dinner. The afternoon was spent in playing ball, and various other amusements. Shortly before supper, at the call of the bell, the family assembled to listen to the poem and reports. The report of remarkable events was a very amusing affair, introducing all the odd adventures and laughable incidents of individual members of the family. As the person who prepares this report omits, of course, all allusion to himself, a special committee is appointed to look after him. This was prepared after the manner of ‘Hiawatha,’ and brought down roars of laughter. Supper at half-past five o’clock, with singing and prayer, closed up the exercises. The following original hymn, composed by Mrs. Dean, entitled the ‘Dying Patriarch,’ was sung at the supper-table. It refers to the grandfather of John, William, Hodges, and Marshall Reed. The author of the hymn was sitting near him during his last illness, and but a short time before his death, in company with some others. He was possessed of an unutterable calm, and was the only one who spoke much. ‘The nearer,’ he said, ‘I approach the heavenly country, the more do I behold and love the beauty and glory of my Redeemer.'

'Ah, methought the peace of Heaven,
Heaven's sweet peace, was in that mien.'

Drawing near the heavenly country,
Where my dearest treasures be, —
Treasures in a lifetime gathered,
And through Christ assured to me, —

I behold the gracious beauty
And the glory of my Lord;
And my soul with love is kindled, —
Kindled by his precious word: —

'I am with thee, with thee always,
Even till the world shall end;
I a mansion have prepared thee;
I a Comforter will send.'

Am I weak? my blest Redeemer,
With his 'everlasting arm,'
Bears me up and bears me onward,
And my soul feels no alarm.

Earth is fading from my vision;
Heaven spreads out before my view:
When the floods roll dark beneath me,
He will bear me safely through.

"After prayer by Hodges Reed of Taunton, the family dispersed. It was a joyous time for all present, and old men and children entered into the sports of the day with energy and zest."

CHAPTER XII.

JOHN READE AND OTHERS.

JOHN READE, one of the early settlers in Boston, was made freeman, May 13, 1640, and had a grant of eleven heads or forty-four acres at Muddy River, Feb. 20, 1640; was an appraiser of Thomas Brittlestone's estate, Oct. 30, 1643. Children, — John, born June 29, 1640; Thomas, Sept. 20, 1641. He was known as Major John Reade; and there are some circumstances tending to show that he was brother to Col. Reade of Salem, Capt. Reade of Boston, and Col. Edward Reade of England, who was father-in-law of John Winthrop, jun., the first Governor of Connecticut. Major Reade moved to Barbadoes, and was an extensive merchant. His family appears to have been in some way related to the family of Abraham Palmer, a prominent member of the Massachusetts Colony. The mercantile house appears to have been represented at a later date by one Joseph Reade, who was probably a son of Major John.

1. JOHN READ was one of the first settlers of Newtown, on Long Island, in 1655. Children, — John and Joseph, who were freeholders in Newtown in 1686. They left Newtown; and I find William, son of one of them, in Ewing, N.J., about the year 1700, who was one of the first settlers of that place. William, a distinguished nursery-man of Elizabeth, N.J., is supposed to be of this family.

STEPHEN READE, born in 1611, came to America in 1631, and lived at one time in Lynn.

BENJAMIN REEDE was of Duxbury, and capable of bearing arms in 1643.

CHAPTER XIV.

JOHN READ, SEN., AND HIS DESCENDANTS IN AMERICA.*

First Generation in America. — JOHN READ, Sen., descended from an ancient and honorable family originally seated in England, was born in Dublin, Ire., in the last year of the reign of King James the Second, A.D. 1688. His parents were persons of high position, wealth, and influence. Of a bold and adventurous disposition, he early determined to visit the British Colonies in America. This determination, in spite of much opposition on the part of his parents, he carried into effect after reaching man's estate. Of his early experiences in this country, little is known. Tradition says, that, after remaining here some time, he was so much pleased with the new country, that he decided to cast his lot in it for life. He accordingly bought lands in Cecil County, in the Province of Maryland, and became a planter. Shortly after taking this important step, Mr. Read's father wrote to him from Dublin, commanding him instantly to return to Ireland, and at the same time informing him that the penalty of disobedience to this command would be the loss of his inheritance, which should pass to his adopted nephew. Notwithstanding this, Mr. Read resolved to remain, and replied to his father to that effect, declaring that he preferred the adventurous and stirring life in the Colonies to the quiet and luxuries of the home he had left in the Old World.

* This chapter has been communicated by JOHN MEREDITH READ, Jun., member of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania, &c.

His birthright having been given to another, and the ties which had bound him to the land of his birth being severed, his love for the country of his choice was increased tenfold ; and he felt that he was now entirely identified with it.

He soon married Miss Mary Howell, an aunt of the late Gov. Howell of New Jersey, a lady of fine personal appearance and cultivated mind, whose family (originally Welsh) had been for some time established in the Province, where it held a highly honorable position.

Mr. Read, after his marriage, continued to reside at his plantation in Maryland Province until the birth of his eldest son George. Soon after this event, in the year 1734, he removed to the head-waters of the Christiana River, in the Province of Delaware. Here he possessed a plantation, upon which was a spacious mansion, surrounded by the usual offices and out-buildings, all built of brick, in the old Colonial style. There were besides upon the plantation a large storehouse, and a wharf situated on the Christiana Creek. He held other property in Christiana and its vicinity, and continued to retain his plantation in Maryland. Mr. Read owned also, like many of the landed gentry of his day, a large flouring-mill, which was situated at North-east. This mill contained some rare and costly machinery, which was the object of general admiration. Gen. Washington, when a very young man, visited and inspected it at the request of his brother, who was about to erect a mill upon his estate, and desired to have similar machinery. In that day, and in that portion of the Colonies, a mill was considered a necessary adjunct to an estate.

Mr. Read continued to reside at his place near Christiana during the remainder of his life. He was a prominent member of the Presbyterian Church in Christiana, and was greatly interested in its establishment and subsequent progress.* Mr. Read departed this life, at his mansion in the Delaware Province, on the fifteenth day of June, 1756, aged sixty-eight years. Mrs. Read survived her husband many years, but never married again. She deceased on the 22d of September, 1784. The children of John Read, sen., and Mary his wife, were — (1.) George ; (2.) William ; (3.) John ; (4.) Thomas ; (5.) James ; (6.) Mary ; (7.) Andrew.

Second Generation in America. — George Read, the eldest child of John Read, sen., and Mary his wife, was born on his father's plantation, in Cecil County, in the Province of Maryland, on the 18th of September, 1732. He received a classical education ; commencing his studies at a seminary at Chester, in the Province of Pennsylvania, and continuing them afterwards under the care of that very learned man and admirable teacher, the Rev. Dr. Francis Allison, then residing at New London, in the Province above mentioned. Among his fellow-pupils at the latter place were Charles Thomson, the able Secretary of Congress ; Hugh Williamson, a member of that body, from North Carolina ; and Dr. Ewing, for many years Provost of the University of Pennsylvania, and eminent as a mathematician and astronomer. At the age of seventeen, Mr. Read commenced the study of the law in the office of John Moland, Esq., a distinguished lawyer of the city of Philadelphia. He applied himself with so much ability, industry, and integrity, to his professional duties and studies, that Mr. Moland soon testified his respect and esteem by relinquishing to Mr. Read a part of his practice. At the early age of nineteen, Mr. Read was called to the bar in the city of Philadelphia. On the 6th of March, 1754, he removed to New Castle, in the Province of Delaware, and commenced the practice of the law in the three lower counties on Delaware and the adjacent ones of Maryland. He found himself in the midst of powerful competitors, — men of unquestioned talents, and thoroughly learned in the law, — among whom were John Ross, then Attorney-General; Benjamin Chew, Joseph Galloway, George Ross, John Dickinson, and Thomas M'Kean. To have rapidly acquired a lucrative practice, and achieved a high reputation for great legal abilities, in the midst of such rivals, is of itself sufficient praise. On the 30th of April, 1763, he succeeded John Ross as Attorney-General. Mr. Read held this office until elected a delegate to the Congress of 1774; when he resigned it, saying that he would not enter that august body trammelled with an office from his Britannic majesty. Mr. Read was very eminent as a lawyer. His profound legal knowledge, his solidity of judgment, and his habit of close and clear reasoning, gained him great influence with juries and judges; and he evinced such unswerving integrity in all his acts, that he was popularly styled “the honest lawyer.” His studies were not confined to the law; for he ever maintained an intimate acquaintance with works on science and art, as also with those of classic and miscellaneous literature. In the year 1763, Mr. Read married a daughter of the Rev. George Ross, for more than fifty years the Rector of Immanuel Church, in the town of New Castle, Del. Mrs. Read possessed a naturally fine understanding, which had been thoroughly cultivated by her father. Her person was beautiful, her manners elegant, and her piety exemplary. In 1765, Mr. Read was elected a member of the Assembly of Delaware: this station he continued to occupy for twelve successive years. About this time, he was one of the committees which reported the numerous addresses made to George the Third by the Delaware Legislature. He was also active and prominent in urging the non-importation agreement; and, as Chairman of the General Committee for its enforcement, rendered valuable services to the cause.

On the 13th of August, 1774, Mr. Read was elected by the General Assembly of Delaware, together with Cæsar Rodney and Thomas McKean, to represent the State in the American Congress, which met in the month of September in Philadelphia. From this period he continued to represent the State of Delaware in Congress during the whole Revolutionary War. On the 4th of July, 1776,* he signed the Declaration of Independence. Joseph Galloway soon after tauntingly told him that he signed with a halter about his neck. Mr. Read replied, that it was a measure demanded by the crisis; and he was prepared to meet any consequences which might ensue. In September, 1776, Mr. Read was President of the Convention which framed the first Constitution of Delaware. In 1777, he was President of the State of Delaware. On the 5th of December, 1782, he was appointed a Judge of the Court of Appeals in Admiralty Cases. This appointment was announced to him in the most flattering manner by Mr. Boudinot, then President of Congress. Mr. Read held this office till its abolition. In 1785, he was appointed by Congress one of the commissioners who constituted a Federal Court created by that body (conformably with the petitions of the States of New York and Massachusetts) for the purpose of determining a controversy which had arisen in relation to territory. In 1786, he was nominated by the Legislature of Delaware as one of their delegates to Annapolis to consult with commissioners from other States relative to the formation of a system of commercial regulations for the Union. In 1787, he was a member of the Convention which framed the Constitution of the United States ; being one of the five signers of the Declaration of Independence who were also framers of the Constitution. Immediately after the adoption of the Constitution, he was elected to the Senate of the United States. At the expiration of his term, he was re-elected. He resigned his seat in the Senate in September, 1793 ; and was immediately appointed Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of Delaware. He performed the duties of this high station with great ability and integrity until the autumn (21st September) of 1798 ; when, after a short illness, he died at his residence* in New Castle.

Mrs. Read † survived him, dying in 1802. The children of George Read, and Gertrude his wife, were — John, George, William, and Mary.

* The mansion of George Read ("the signer"), at New Castle, was situated on the bank of the river Delaware, of which it commanded an extensive view, and in the midst of an extensive garden which ran back to the grounds where were the offices and stables. It was a large, old-fashioned mansion, built of brick, with a spacious hall running through it; on one side of which was a very large drawing-room; and, on the other, the library and dining-room; and, still further in the rear, a roomy kitchen. Above were the spacious sleeping apartments. In the garden about the house bloomed a profusion of flowers, among which the tulips were particularly conspicuous on account of their great variety and beauty. Here Mr. Read resided for many years in the style of the Colonial gentry, who maintained a state and etiquette which has long since disappeared.

Mr. Read always travelled on his circuits in a yellow chariot drawn by bay horses.

There are two original portraits of George Read, — one by Gilbert Stuart, the other by Charles Edge Pine, — and both painted about the year 1785. John Meredith Read, jun., of Albany, N.Y., has a copy of these portraits of his great-grandfather, made by Sully, the distinguished artist and pupil of Gilbert Stuart.

† Mrs. Read's father, the Rev. George Ross, was, for more than fifty years, Rector of the Episcopal Church in New Castle. George Ross, jun., an eminent lawyer, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a Judge of the Court of Appeals in Admiralty, was a brother of Mrs. Read's; as were also John Ross, Attorney-General under George the Second; and the Rev. Æneas Ross, who became Rector of Immanuel Church soon after the decease of his father in 1754. One of the sisters of Mrs. Read married Gen. William Thompson, a distinguished officer in the Revolution; another sister married Mr. Biddle, who was presiding officer of the Pennsylvania legislative body before the Revolution; still another sister married the Rev. William Thompson, Rector of an Episcopal church in the Province of Maryland.

Third Generation in America. — John Read, jun., son of George Read (the signer), and Gertrude his wife, was born at his father's mansion at New Castle, in the present State of Delaware, on the 7th July, 1769. When only seven years old, he was a witness to the attack made by the row-galleys upon the "Roebuck" and "Liverpool" frigates off the mouth of Christiana Creek; and afterwards accompanied his mother in her various removals during the Revolutionary War, which the exposed situation of their residence at New Castle made necessary for their safety. These things were often referred to in after-life. After graduating at Princeton College in 1787, then under the presidency of the Rev. Dr. Witherspoon, an old and intimate friend of his father's, Mr. Read commenced the study of the law at New Castle, in the office of his father; and, being admitted to the bar, removed to the city of Philadelphia, where he practised with ability and success for many years. In 1796, Mr. Read married Miss Martha Meredith, eldest daughter of Samuel Meredith, the first Treasurer of the United States, and eminent among the patriots of the Revolution for his zeal, sacrifices, and services in behalf of his country.*

Mrs. Read's mother was a daughter of Dr. Thomas Cadwalader, and sister of Gen. John Cadwalader, the brave and active Revolutionary hero, who challenged and wounded Gen. Conway because he had traduced and endeavored to supplant Washington. George Clymer, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and a framer of the Constitution of the United States, was an uncle of Mrs. Read's.

* Of Reese Meredith, the father of the Treasurer, a very wealthy merchant of Philadelphia, the following well-known anecdote is told:—

When Gen. Washington was a young man, and before he had attained distinction, he visited Philadelphia, and made his appearance at the Coffee House, where he had not a single acquaintance, and was therefore unnoticed. Mr. Meredith coming in, and finding a stranger in this awkward situation, went up to him, took him by the hand, inquired his name, introduced himself, took him to his house, and behaved with so much kindness and hospitality, as not only to induce his guest to continue at his house while he remained in the city, but afterwards to make it his home when he visited Philadelphia.

In 1797, Mr. Read was appointed Agent-General of the United States to act on their behalf in relation to such claims as might be made against the United States before the commissioners appointed to carry into effect the sixth article of Jay's treaty. Some of his labors are to be found in a book, published in Philadelphia, called "Arguments on British Debts," which contains some able papers written by Mr. Read.

Mr. Read was also for some years a member of the City Council ; and, in 1815, was elected to the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania, and was appointed Chairman of the important Committee on Roads and Inland Navigation, composed, at that day, of thirty-four members. In 1816, he was re-elected, and, while presiding over the deliberations of this committee, took a severe cold, which produced an illness which brought him to the brink of the grave. Mrs. Read, who went to Harrisburg to tend her husband, fell a sacrifice to her devotion to him.

Having recovered from the immediate effects of his illness, Mr. Read was elected to the Senate to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Nicholas Biddle, Esq. ; and, whilst a member of that body, was elected by them, in 1818, a director on the part of the State of the Philadelphia Bank. In 1817, on the revival of the office, he was appointed City Solicitor by the Mayor, Gen. Robert Wharton. In 1819, he was elected President of the Philadelphia Bank, and ably and faithfully filled this office until his resignation in 1841. A few months afterwards, he removed to the city of Trenton ; where, amidst the friends and connections of his wife, he spent his remaining days, surrounded by his books, which formed a never-failing source of pleasure and information. He died on the 13th of July, 1854, at the very advanced age of eighty-five, leaving a large estate.

Mr. Read was a communicating member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, and, for many years, the rector's warden of the united churches of Christ Church, St. Peter's, and St. James's; and, upon his removal to Trenton, took a deep interest in the welfare of St. Michael's Church at that place. He was characterized by ability, sound judgment, and industry, coupled with scrupulous integrity, modesty, piety, and benevolence. He was, moreover, of a very courteous and pleasing address; ever evincing the thorough politeness of the old school.

He was a devoted husband, a kind father, and a warm friend; a man of peaceful habits. He lived through three wars (two with the mother-country); and he always remembered with pleasure that his maternal uncle, George Ross, was a signer of the Declaration of Independence; and that his own father, George Read, and his wife's uncle, George Clymer, were two out of the five signers who were also framers of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Read married but once. He had three children,—John Meredith, Henry, and Margaret Meredith. Of these, only one (John Meredith Read) survived him. Henry Read, his second child, born at Philadelphia in 1802, was a physician of excellent abilities, thorough education, and industry. He died at Carbondale, Penn., at the early age of twenty-six, unmarried. Mr. Read's only daughter, Margaret Meredith Read, died at Trenton, N.J., in the early part of March, 1854, unmarried.

Fourth Generation in America.—John Meredith Read, eldest son of John Read, and Margaret his wife, was born at Philadelphia in the year 1800. He married, on the 20th of March, 1828, Miss Marshall of Boston, Mass. Their first child, Emily, was born in December, 1829. They had, besides, an only son, John Meredith Read, jun.; and also three daughters, who died in infancy. Mrs. Read died in the month of February, 1841.

Miss Emily M. Read married W. H. Hyde, Esq., in June, 1849; and died in March, 1854, leaving one daughter (sixth Generation in America), Emma Habicht Hyde, born November, 1851.

Mr. Read married, in 1855, a sister of the Hon. J. R. Thompson, United-States senator from New Jersey. He has no children by his second marriage.

He is one of the ablest lawyers in the country, and filled the various offices, from City Solicitor to that of Chief-Justice of Pennsylvania; which office he now holds. He has also been a prominent member of Congress.

Fifth Generation in America. — John Meredith Read, jun., only son and only surviving child of John Meredith Read by his first wife, was born at Philadelphia; was educated at Brown University; and travelled extensively in this country, in Europe, and the West Indies. He is a lawyer, residing at Albany, N.Y.; where he married, on the 7th April, 1859, the youngest daughter of Hannon Pumpelly, Esq. He is a member of various literary and historical societies, and devotes a portion of his time to literary labors.

Of his generation, Mr. Read is the only surviving representative of George Read, the signer, who bears the family name. He has in his possession a number of interesting and valuable family portraits and relics.

When resident in Providence, R.I., Mr. Read was captain of a fine company, — the “National Cadets,” or “Tigers.” This company has always been noted for its thorough drill and soldierly bearing. Mr. Read also served as aide-de-camp to his excellency Gov. Hoppin, with the rank of colonel.

Second Generation in America. — William Read, second son of John Read, sen., and Mary his wife, was born at his father's mansion, at Christiana, in the Delaware Province, in the year 1735 (?). He was a merchant, and resided for some time at Philadelphia, and afterwards in the Havana in the West Indies, where he was assassinated in the year 1763. He was married, and left one child, a daughter, who died unmarried.

Second Generation in America. — John Read, 2d, third son of John Read, sen., was born at Christiana in the latter part of the year 1737 (?). He was a man of independent fortune, and had no regular profession, but attended to his own and the family property. He never married. He died at Pottsgrove, Penn., in the year 1808, at an advanced age.

Second Generation in America. — Thomas Read, fourth son of John Read, sen., was born at his father's mansion, at Christiana, about the year 1740. He was a captain in the Continental Navy. He was present at the battle of Trenton, and commanded the guns which raked the stone bridge across the Assanpink. During the war, he commanded the thirty-two-gun frigate "George Washington." Several years after the close of the war, in 1787, he effected for the first time the out-of-season passage to China (vide "Encyclopædia Americana"). Capt. Read married a widow (Mrs. Field of New Jersey), who had two children by her first marriage. One of them (the son) was the father of the Hon. Richard S. Field of Princeton: the other child (a daughter) was the mother of Commodore R. F. Stockton.

Capt. Read resided at Whitehill, near Bordentown, N.J.; and his mansion was for a number of years the seat of much elegant hospitality. Capt. Read died A.D. —. He had no children.

Second Generation in America. — James Read, fifth son of John Read, sen., was born in his father's mansion, at Christiana, in the Province of Delaware, A.D. 1743. He was a lieutenant-colonel in the war of the Revolution, and served with great credit at the battles of Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, and Germantown. He was first-paymaster to the Continental Navy; also commissioner of the navy for the Middle States during the Revolution. He was, besides, a member of the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania.

He married Miss Susan Cowey, and had five children; all of whom died unmarried, except his third child, Susan Read, born twenty-fifth day of December, 1776: she married J. F. Eckard, Esq., Danish consul for the Middle States. They had three children,—(1.) Mary Read Eckard, born 1803; died 1823, unmarried. (2.) James, now the Rev. Dr. James Read Eckard. (3.) Frederick S., M.D., afterwards a skilful practising physician of Philadelphia, who died on the 20th June, 1856. Mrs. Susan Read Eckard still survives, in her eighty-fourth year, and is a truly remarkable woman: she is still able to hold a pen; and her letters to her friends are always full of originality, both in thought and expression.

Col. James Read died at Philadelphia the 31st December, 1822, aged seventy-nine years. His wife died some years before him.

Second Generation in America.—Mary Read, sixth child and only daughter of John Read, sen., and Mary his wife, was born at her father's mansion, at Christiana, about the year 1745. In the year 1769, she married Gunning Bedford, sen. He had served in the war of 1755 with the rank of lieutenant in the Pennsylvania levy, and was a gentleman of independent fortune. As lieutenant-colonel of the famous Delaware Regiment, he took a prominent part in the Revolutionary War. He distinguished himself in various battles, and was wounded at the battle of the White Plains while gallantly leading his regiment to the attack.* After the war, he filled a variety of important public offices.

* John Meredith Read, jun., of Albany, N.Y., has in his possession the sword which belonged to his great-uncle, Gov. Bedford; and which was used by him in the old French War in 1755-6, and also in the various battles of the Revolution.

He finally became Governor of Delaware; and died, while holding that office, on the 30th September, 1797. His wife survived him; dying at Pottsgrove, Penn., in 1820. They never had any children.

Second Generation in America. — Andrew Read, seventh child of John Read, sen., was born at Christiana, in the Delaware Province, A.D. —. He was a planter. He lived and died in Cecil County, Md. He was married, and had one son, William, who, after the war of 1812, removed to Ohio. There are none of his descendants living who bear the family name.

Third Generation in America. — George Read, 2d, the second son of George Read the signer, and Gertrude his wife, was born at his father's mansion in New Castle, in the then Province of Delaware, on the 29th of August, 1765. He resided at New Castle, Del. He was a very distinguished lawyer, and filled a number of important offices. He married his cousin, Miss Mary Thompson, a daughter of the distinguished Revolutionary officer, Gen. William Thompson. He had seven children (fourth Generation in America),— (1.) George, born June 4, 1788; died 1st November, 1856. (2.) William Thompson Read, born 22d August, 1792, married a great-niece of James Booth, the able Secretary of Delaware during the Revolution. Mr. William T. Read is by profession a lawyer. Being entirely independent, he has devoted much time to literary pursuits, and has collected materials for a life of George Read the signer. Mr. Read was Secretary of Legation when the late Cæsar A. Rodney was Minister to Buenos Ayres. He has no children. (3.) Gunning Bedford Read, who died in 1826, unmarried. (4.) George Read died on the 3d September, 1836, aged seventy-one years.

Third Generation in America. — William Read, third son of George Read the signer, was born at his father's mansion, in New Castle, on the 10th October, 1767. He was a merchant, largely engaged in the East-India trade, and resided at Philadelphia. He married, on the 22d September, 1796, Ann M'Call, whose family had been long honorably known in Philadelphia, where it held a high position. Mr. Read died at Philadelphia on the 25th September, 1846, aged seventy-nine years ; Mrs. Read, the 17th July, 1845, aged seventy-three years. He moved to Rye, in West-Chester County, N.Y., in 1684, and remained there three or four years. He then moved to Norwalk, Conn., on Five-mile River, at a place called Read's Farms; and his name is found upon the records of Norwalk in 1687. He died in Norwalk, in the ninety-eighth year of his age, in 1730; and was interred in a tomb on his own farm. His house in Norwalk was used as a substitute for a meeting-house. He is now in the jewelry business, in connection with his father, at No. 240, North Second Street, Philadelphia. The want of genealogical knowledge is significantly illustrated in the fact, that George W. was in New-York City, upon business, when his cousin Henry was blown up, and was compelled to serve on the jury of inquest, and reluctantly served; but did not know the connection between himself and the deceased till some years afterwards.

REED OF THE BOSTON-POLICE NOTORIETY.

GEORGE READ, was son of a German emigrant by that name, who was a ship-builder; at which business George served an apprenticeship, and married Miss Church, a descendant of Capt. Church, of King Philip's War notoriety, and a deputy sheriff in Waldoborough, Me. Meeting with some difficulty in the business of sheriff in Maine, he came to Boston, and was appointed constable of Boston in 1812; which office he held till his death in 1843. He was the most distinguished rogue-catcher that ever lived in New England. There were many rumors afloat in his day in reference to his infamous conduct, which were the most of them founded in the terror which he caused in the hearts of the wicked, as nothing was ever substantiated against him detrimental to his reputation for integrity. He at one time owned a farm in Quincy, called "Bighill," where he lived, and came into town daily; but, when Mr. Quincy came into office as mayor, he informed him, that, if he wished to retain his position as constable, he must live in the city. He accordingly abandoned his farm, and ever after lived in town. He was on board of her Aug. 19, 1812; and, being called to duty at the gun, saw the stars and stripes in the distance, floating in the breeze, and making towards the "Guerrière;" which was to him an assurance that his redemption was nigh. He objected to fighting, and was ordered below. The "Guerrière" soon began to fire; but the "Constitution" saved her powder till she got the right distance and position, and then her chain-shot soon did the work. He represents that the slaughter made on board the British frigate was terrible, as was also the destruction to her rigging. He was thirty years of his life a seaman, fifteen of which he was ship-master; but the day he arrived in Boston, and landed from on board of the "Constitution" amidst the cheers and congratulations of his countrymen and the joy of his friends, was probably the happiest of his eventful life. He now lives in Boston, having retired from the hazardous pursuits of the seas. He married Rebecca Griffith. ## CHAPTER XXVII.

He was stationed at Albany till 1763; when he was sent to the relief of Fort Pitt, then besieged by Indians. He obtained a grant of a large tract of land on Otter Creek, in Vermont; and was the Col. young ; Joseph Stacy, born Oct. 1, 1832 ; James John, Jan. 10, 1835. He was a prominent member of the Mechanics' Charitable Association. He died May 24, 1853, aged sixty-six years and ten months. He was engaged in the harness-business, at No. 11, Exchange Street, Boston ; and carried on an extensive traffic in all manner of wares, to such an extent, that his store became proverbial as the place where all manner of odd articles could be obtained. It is said that a wager was once laid between two men, that an article could not be called for which he had not on hand : and the party taking the negative called for a second-hand pulpit, and behold he had it stored away in one of the lofts ; and the next article called for was a second-hand wheelbarrow-wheel, with the same result. The business is still carried on by his sons, who have moved to Tremont Row ; but the family make Cambridge their residence.

James, son of Joseph Stacy and Esther Goodwin Read, born Nov. 19, 1789 ; married Hannah Palmer, daughter of Capt. Joseph and Jerusha Johnson Palmer, Dec. 6, 1815. She was a descendant of Stephen Palmer, who settled in Cambridge the latter part of the seventeenth century. There is a tradition that he came from the county of Kent in England. He was a tanner. The Palmer Family, for a long time, owned the estate adjacent to and lying on the south side of the old Cambridge Burying-ground. The last of the name who owned and lived on this estate was Major John Palmer, whose house was near the magnificent elm which was cut down a few years since. The children of James and Hannah Read are four : viz., Lucy Richmond ; Helen Maria, wife of George Gardner of Boston ; Louisa, wife of Christopher C. Chadwick of Boston ; Sarah Elizabeth. Mr. Read has for many years been an active and prominent merchant of Boston, and is now the senior partner of the mercantile house of Reed, Gardner, and Company, cou-sisting of James Read, Henry J. Gardner (late Governor of the Commonwealth), Samuel P. Dexter, and Arthur H. Poor. On account of the special business of the firm, they are denominated "domestic-goods commission-merchants." Mr. Read is interested in, and treasurer or manager of, several large establishments, — all, except one, situated in Massachusetts, — in which, for the most part, cotton goods are manufactured.

Prior to 1842, Mr. Read had for a long period been engaged in the importing and jobbing business. About the commencement of that year, having made great importations and very extensive sales, he found his indebtedness large, the money-market stringent, and his collections, owing to divers unforeseen adverse causes existing at that time, slow, difficult, and very unsatisfactory. He saw that it would be necessary for him to devote all his efforts and energies, for a considerable period, to the collection of his debts and the closing-up of his concerns, by means of which he would not be able for several years, perhaps, to engage with activity and confidence in any new and prosperous business; and probably the result of his labors in settling up his old affairs would be, that, in addition to the loss of much valuable time, he would find himself, with diminished energy and without capital, unable to enter upon some new line of business with an assurance of success.

Under these circumstances, he, with much foresight and wisdom, concluded at once to suspend payment; believing that such a course would be most prudent with regard to the interest of his creditors, and the only expedient one for himself. He then availed himself of the provisions of an existing law of Congress, and gave up all his property to judicious, efficient assignees. The amount of his indebtedness was quite large; but the same was much exceeded by the nominal amount of his assets, a considerable portion of which was available property. In a few months his assignees declared a dividend; which, after paying all the interest that had accrued, exceeded fifty cents on a dollar of the principal of all his debts.

Soon after his suspension, he formed a copartnership with the two gentlemen who are now his sons-in-law. They put into the concern ample capital for carrying on the business of domestic-goods commission-merchants. The circumstances under which he commenced this new business were quite auspicious. The money-market had become easy, the rate of interest not exceeding four to five per cent on prime paper. The manufacturing business was good, the quantity of goods turned out was large, and the sales were quick. The new firm at once entered upon a prosperous business. The senior partner's old friends, and many others, consigned their goods to his new house for sale; and, when the dividend of upwards of fifty cents on a dollar of the principal of all old debts was paid at an early day, perfect confidence was felt by the manufacturers, by all business-men, and by the whole community, in the new firm.

The assignees closed up the settlement of the old concern, and paid off more than five-sixths of the whole indebtedness. Within a comparatively short period, Mr. Read found himself able to pay off the balance not paid by his assignees. His creditors, who had already been paid an amount of dividend quite extraordinary, and had given their debtor a full discharge, were much surprised when they had notice to call at Mr. Read's counting-room, and receive the residue of their respective claims.

The course of Mr. Read was so honorable, and satisfactory to his old creditors, that they expressed their gratification by formal resolutions and other marked tokens of their respect and regard. Since that time, he has enjoyed a course of uninterrupted success and prosperity. His mercantile credit now rests on a solid foundation, not to be affected by the revulsions of business; and the character for sagacity, intelligence, and integrity, which he has borne during his whole career, shines with increased brightness with his advancing years. Mr. Read has often been called on to render timely assistance, when merchants and friends have found themselves in embarrassment and perplexity; and no one can be named who has rendered more valuable aid as referee, as adviser and composer of difficulties, or who has been more ready than he to contribute his full share of labor towards forming new arrangements, and reconstructing or settling old concerns in the best possible manner, or to exert his practical wisdom for the benefit of others, and to put his hand in his pocket for every good purpose at the right time and in the right way.

While it is intended to refrain from alluding, on this occasion, to matters and circumstances of a private character, yet it seems not improper to say, that at the time his business was interrupted, in 1842, he was sustained and consoled by the kindest sympathy, and by timely assurances of co-operation, from the several members of his family, all of whom were ready to pass with smiling fortitude through a season of apparent adversity, and to do all in their power to regain the means of carrying out honest and benevolent purposes in a future career of prosperity.

CHAPTER XXX.

JOSIAH READ OF CONNECTICUT, AND HIS DESCENDANTS.

JOSIAH READ was probably elder son of John of Rehoboth, Mass., and was among the early emigrants from that State to Connecticut, — Massachusetts being the cradle of emigration as well as of liberty; and one of his first adventures was to the vicinity of New London. He was there, as of record, in 1652, and probably earlier. He had two sons; viz., John and Josiah. His descendants were formerly very numerous in Norwich and Windham; but have much diminished there, since the commencement of the last century, by emigration to other States.

2. Josiah, the son of Josiah, married Grace Holloway of Marshfield, Mass., in November, 1666, — Rehoboth and Marshfield being then contiguous towns; though the increase of inhabitants, and the incorporations of precincts and parishes into towns, has long since made the two places socially far distant. He settled in Norwich, Conn. Children, — Josiah, born April, 1668; William, April, 1770; Elizabeth, September, 1672; Experience, Feb. 27, 1675; John, Aug. 15, 1679; Joseph, March 12, 1681; Susanna, Sept. 20, 1685; Hannah, July, 1688. He died at Norwich, July 3, 1717: Grace, his wife, died May 9, 1727.

To the Editor of the "Boston Journal."

A GENERAL family gathering of children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, embracing every living member, to the number of three-score, to greet the old folks, near fourscore years and ten, hale and hearty, is a thing of no common occurrence. Such a gathering took place on Thursday, Aug. 16, at the house of Mr. Josiah P. Read in Swansea, N.H. About eighty of his descendants and near relatives enjoyed the privilege of sitting down to Great-grandfather Read's extension-table.

The hearts of the old folks were large : but the old house was not large enough for this large family ; so the young folks contrived to meet the difficulty by sending the boys out into the woods, and collecting materials for making a little birch arbor on the lawn. This done, the table was drawn out just long enough ; and was quickly filled with a bountiful supply of food and fruit, and tastefully decorated with bouquets made by the little folks, and a beautiful wreath, formed of oak-leaves, placed in an oblong circle, extending from end to end and across the table. The venerable couple were conducted to their seats, at the head, by their oldest son,—William Read, Esq., of Swansea. Rev. John G. Wilson, their beloved pastor, was seated next to them ; and the families, with their children, in genealogical order. The divine blessing was invoked by W. S. Wilder of New York. After a very pleasant and social discussion of the contents of the table, the aged father briefly related some incidents of his early life. He was born in Rehoboth, Mass. His father, grandfather, and great-grandfather bore the name of Timothy Reed. His father was a soldier in the Revolution, and was also engaged in the French War. Many things connected with the Revolution were fresh in his memory, — such as the frequent alarms, the assembling of men at the Town Hall, the forming of companies, the Beacon-Hill heights, and the burning of Charlestown, &c. He well remembered the dark day; and said, “It was as dark as a very cloudy night at the full of the moon.” Two years before the close of the war, his father moved to this town. Ox-teams were employed to carry the goods and the children, — the weights of all being taken. The minister was called in, and religious services were held appropriate to the occasion. They travelled about twenty miles per day, and were ten days in reaching Swansey. They spent the sabbaths on the road religiously, — making about seven days’ travel. A log-house was built, and two acres of timber-land cleared, the first year. The Indians had been very troublesome in this vicinity; but they had disappeared. Bears and wolves were plenty, and made sad havoc among the sheep and the grain. One night, nearly fifteen sheep were killed by the wolves. A few families had previously commenced settlements in this town, and all but one lived in log-huts. A rudely constructed meeting-house had been raised, where divine service was regularly held on the sabbath. The upper part of the house was filled with swallows, which built their nests there and reared their young; and the basement was used as a sheep-pen, to protect them from the wolves. He helped to build a new meeting-house, and the first school-house in town.

On becoming of age, he built a house of his own, procured some land, and then looked out for a wife; and was married to his present beloved companion, Mary Forbes of Barre, Mass., when she was but seventeen years of age. For over sixty years, they had lived happily together; and now their eyes were rejoiced to see their children and their children’s children gathered around this festive board. While the old patriarch was giving utterance to the history of his early life, the younger members drew near, and listened with great interest; and, if we mistake not, when the old man touched upon some of the trying scenes of his early experience in the then wilderness of Swansey, an occasional tear stole its way down the furrowed cheeks of some of the oldest members of the family, soon chased away with a cheerful smile, as the agreeable tones of the family melodeon sounded the notes of a familiar tune, in which all joined in singing an appropriate song. This done, then commenced a regular family chit-chat about old times. William told of his remembrance of Grandfather and Grandmother Reed, who lived to the age of fourscore, and were kindly cared for during their last days by his respected father and mother, now present; how he used to yoke up the oxen, and, with a sled, take his little brothers and sisters to the distant schoolhouse by a rough and crooked path through the woods. Josiah M., Benjamin, and Edwin F., each had their turn; and it was pleasantly, and, we think, profitably improved. Rev. Mr. Wilson then closed this interview with some very timely and exceedingly impressive remarks to parents and children; and offered a fervent prayer to God, that this festal gathering might be as truly profitable as it had been pleasant, and that, when gathered in our Father's house above, there might none be left out.

It was remarked by one of the brothers, that none of the family ever arrived to any marked distinction. Still, we learn, the highest offices in the gift of the town have been honorably filled by some, the Legislature has had its representative, the military honors its recipient, among them. The Christian Church has in it many of its worthy members, including grandparents and grandchildren. If there are none very rich, there are none very poor. In the cause of temperance, this may be called the "banner" family. The use of intoxicating drinks is not known to exist among them. Many of them have privately and publicly labored to have the land as free from the curse of rum as it now is from the ravages of the Indians, the bears, and the wolves. R. ✓

The subject of the following sketch is of no blood relation to Reeds or Reads; but the intimate connection between his Puritan ancestor and the first John Read of Rehoboth, with the interest he has manifested in this work and the assistance rendered by him, makes it proper to insert the following genealogical account:—

NOTE.—Rev. Samuel Newman was educated at Oxford University, Eng. He was minister at the chapelry of the parish at Midhope, about a dozen miles from Sheffield, in Yorkshire. He removed to America in 1635; paid a short visit to Dorchester, and settled over the church at Weymouth. In 1644, he, with most of his church, removed to a new purchase, where he was the first minister and founder of the town, which he named REHOBOTH; where he died at the age of sixty-one. He was a pious, hospitable, and learned divine. He was the author of a large Concordance of the Bible, the first of much extent in the English language, published at London in 1658,—a rare work, and of great labor; and the third known copy now in the world is the one he reserved for his own use, and is now in the possession of a descendant in the seventh generation (S. C. Newman, Esq., of Pawtucket, R.I.).

The oldest son (Samuel, as above) was a prominent citizen of Rehoboth; for several years the representative of the town at the General Court at Boston; was deacon of the church which his father had founded; and died at the age of eighty-five.

The second son (Antipas) was minister of Wenham: his wife was a daughter of Gov. Winthrop, of the Massachusetts Colony; and, after this son's death, his widow married a son of Gov. Endicot. The third son (Noah) succeeded his father in the ministry at Rehoboth, and died in that office: his wife was a daughter of Rev. Henry Flint, minister of Braintree; and her mother was Margery, sister of Rev. Leonard Hoar, third President of Harvard University. Hopestill, the fourth and last child of Rev. Samuel Newman, became the wife of Rev. George Shove of Dorchester, who was settled as the third pastor of the church at Taunton, of which he was the founder; and his family, of the old staid town of Rehoboth, Mass., which has since become, by division, the mother of seven towns, each of which now contains a much larger population than did the mother herself, when, in 1692, she gave her first child (Attleborough) its dower and freedom.

The following is a lineal descent from Rev. Samuel Newman to S. C. Newman of Pawtucket, R.I., author of a genealogical chart of the descendants of John Read of Rehoboth, and several other genealogies. This line were all born at Rehoboth; and it may be remarked, that the founder of that ancient town was the friend and pastor of John Read, who removed from Weymouth with him to Rehoboth, as referred to at p. 186.

He removed his family to Rising Sun, Ind., in 1815; while he constructed the steamboat "Pike," at Louisville, with which he entered the port of St. Louis in July, 1817, — it being the first steam-raft that ever landed there, or stemmed the current of the Mississippi above the mouth of the Ohio. He afterwards owned the "Franklin" and "Yankee," steamboats; the former being sunk in the Mississippi while he owned her. He settled in St. Louis, 1817; and, in 1820, he, as captain of one of his steamers, and his son (Dayton) clerk of another, sailed from St. Louis to New Orleans; and both died there, in September of that year, of yellow fever.
